Herb Donaldson Lands Muni Bench

Gov. First Taps Gay Man for Superior Court

by George Mendenhall

Herb Donaldson, long-time Gay activist and civic leader, was placed on the Municipal Bench last week by former Governor Jerry Brown. This newspaper has learned that the attorney was slotted by the governor for the Superior Court but Donaldson rejected the higher position.

The Municipal Court position has a $57,776 salary, while Superior Court judges receive $5,000 more. Finances were obviously not one of Donaldson's considerations. A close associate of the new judge told this reporter that he chose the Municipal position "so he could handle more people-oriented type cases." When questioned about the matter, Donaldson appeared surprised at the discovery. He had "no comment."

The low-key Donaldson is now widely known in the Gay community, although political insiders know of his generous financial contributions to Gay groups, civic causes, and progressive political candidates. The activist owns a successful coffee import/export business, Capricorn Coffees, located in the South of Market area. He has 15 employees who operate the firm, freeing him for a variety of community service involvements, including positions on the boards of several service organizations.

Few people knew that it was Donaldson who was the primary financial "angel" behind the successful Gay Outreach program that has placed many Gay people on the local police force. A life-long Democrat, he is active in the Alice B. Toklas Democratic Club and serves as a director of Gay Rights Advocates, Public Advocates, the San Francisco Mental Health Association, and Bethany Methodist Senior Center.

MIDNIGHT TELEPHONE CALL

Judge Donaldson filled a Municipal Court chair three days after being selected by Governor Brown. His first day was Monday, in which he began handling small claims cases and a tenant/landlord trial.

Brown, known for his unusual working hours, had called Donaldson two minutes before midnight on New Year's Eve to tell him he would like to see him in his Sacramento office the following day. He asked the attorney on the telephone, "We have met before; haven't we?" During the one-hour office conversation, Brown questioned Donaldson extensively about his philosophy of life and attitudes about law and order. Suddenly, the governor told Donaldson that if he could wait five minutes he would sign the necessary papers. The following day, the activist was sworn in by Superior Judge John Dearman and asked if he would begin work on Monday.

Ironically, the governor had originally telephoned Donaldson exactly 18 years after the new judge had been arrested himself by the San Francisco police. It was on New Year's Eve in 1965 that Donaldson had been apprehended at California Hall when he attempted to convince the police that they should not raid the city's first public Gay dance. An "obstructing the police" charge was later dropped. The resulting publicity began a re-evaluation by the police department of its attitudes toward Gay people.

Donaldson served as an attorney for the Southern Pacific after graduating from Stanford in 1965. He later

Gay Man Says 'Stop Treatment'

by Wayne April

Death is a bitch, but it's as much a part of living as living itself, and no one would agree more than Jim Gresham. Jim has AIDS, Kaposi's sarcoma, and another rare opportunistic disease. The chances of Jim ever living a normal life again were zilch. Rather than remain hooked up to machines the rest of his life, Jim chose to die this week, with his wits about him and his dignity intact.

Gresham has been a resident of Room 410 at Ralph K. Davies Medical Center for a month. He went in thinking he might be a week and ended up signing a living will. He has been a victim of what the doctors now call Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome, or AIDS. With his immune system barely functioning, Jim also contracted two diseases that take advantage of such cases — Kaposi's sarcoma, a cancer, and crypto sporidiosis, a parasite. The KS is centered in Gresham's chest, and the intestinal disease is wreaking havoc with his digestive tract. He is in constant pain and has lost a considerable amount of weight. He looks gaunt and grey, like a man who death has touched, but not yet taken. He is 35 years old.

Jim still has his sense of humor and he shares it with his visitors. Once he gets going he almost sounds like his old self again, but he tires quickly, and the time allotted to visitors gets shorter and shorter.

Gresham decided last week to have his intravenous tube removed. The tube supplies nourishment directly into his heart. He has been surviving on the tube for a month, ever since his digestive system stopped working.

3 Cops Raid Jaguar Book Store

by Konstantin Berlandt

Two Jaguar Book Store clerks, John Pofahl and Robert Hale, intend to file complaints today (Thursday) with police Internal Affairs Bureau against three San Francisco officers who last week allegedly cleared the backroom of the private membership club at 18th and Hartford Streets off Castro.

According to both clerks, Officer Donoso Cortes, #656, drew a knife on Pofahl in order to force entrance into the restricted club.

The story as Hale and Pofahl told the B.A.R. last week:

Around 2:30 a.m., after the bars closed Wednesday morning, December 28, SFPD Officers Cortes, John Monroe, #1345, and Robert Ford, #1330, entered the premises. Monroe stopped by the Christmas tree near the front door while Ford and Cortes moved directly to the locked entrance to the backroom club.

Pofahl, 22, the clerk on duty, explained that without a membership no one could enter the club — a bold lettered sign "No Exceptions" on the locked door, which Cortes tried anyway, insisting these were public premises where he had a right to go.

When Pofahl refused to open the locked door, Cortes pulled a knife, Pofahl says, describing it as "four inches of shiny steel . . . (it) scared the hell out of me." Nevertheless, he continued to bar the door, until an exiting customer opened it, and the two officers entered, Officer Monroe staying to hold the door open.

Something the Mayor Will Sign?

Britt Shifts on Partners Bill

Benefits Plan Postponed

by George Mendenhall

In an attempt to find something that the mayor will sign into law, Supervisor Harry Britt has broadened the registration of the "domestic partners" of city employees to include any live-in person not related by marriage. The original legislation, dropped by the Board of Supervisors this week after a mayoral veto, was to include registered partners "not related by blood," and the new relationship was to be added wherever the word "marriage" appeared.

Britt is requesting that his new package (two ordinances and two resolutions) go before the Board's Civil Service and Administration committee on February 1. One ordinance proposes the extension of the registration requirement; the other would make into law what is now common practice — an allowance for live-in partners to visit city employees in city jails and hospitals. The first of the proposed resolutions would be addressed to the city's Civil Service Commission, requesting that it submit (within three months) a proposal that city employees may obtain bereavement leave upon the death of a partner. The second resolution would be to the mayor, urging that she request the Health Service System Board to set up a health plan for partners within a one-year period.

Thus far little controversy has stirred over the new package except the registration portion. The question is whether registration is itself justified and whether such registration is, in reality, a form of "marriage" for live-in partners. Britt emphatically denies that the registration is a marriage certificate. However, he does stress that it is a way of "expanding the concept of family so that all people can choose their partners outside of the traditional forms." Registration is a more honest recognition of our lifestyle, he maintains.

"Of course, Gay people should be able to marry if they wish, but that is not the issue here," says the former Methodist minister. "Marriage must not be recognized as the sole form of dependency. Emotional caring and economic sharing should be the criteria. Registration would give lovers, straight and Gay, a way to publicly validate their relationships. It would also establish a public record to determine dependency for immediate and future benefits."

An unstated purpose of registration is that health benefits might be extended to partners at a later date. Any such benefits must be granted, under the city charter, by the city's Health Board. Britt scratched the disqualification of "blood relatives" from his original legislation in an evident attempt to win more support from some supervisors. However, health plan officials have emphasized that they will not permit blood relatives (i.e. cousins, mothers, uncles) into the system because of the projected increased rates involved. Attorney Matt Coles, author of much of the legislation, is not happy with Britt's change in the bill but is hopeful that it can be reversed later by the Health Board if it considers health benefits.

The problem continues as to what Mayor Feinstein might be willing to sign when it reaches her desk. The new package has been submitted to her through her Gay aide, Peter Nardoza. Supervisor Britt is chagrined that the mayor has not responded to date, "although we are willing to work with her when we know what her questions and objections are." Nardoza says, "She knows what is going on. I cannot say when or if she will be responding."

One major objection to the original legislation by the mayor was to a section that emphasized "whenever the city and county of San Francisco uses marriage as a factor in making any decision (including but not limited to the availability of any service, privilege, or employment benefit) it shall use domestic partnership in the same way." The mayor believed the section was overly broad and open to varied interpretations. The section has been dropped by Britt.

The mayor has also called for a possible three-year waiting period before any domestic partner could register. The authors are hopeful that the mayor has eased off on this suggestion. (The local Concerned Republicans for Individual Rights has proposed a six-month waiting period before partners could qualify.) The Britt stipulation is that one can't have had a registered arrangement in the previous six months.

Britt and his aides were confident last month when his original legislation passed the Board 8-3, meaning that there were 8 votes to override a possible veto from the mayor. Britt went East on a speaking tour during this crucial period, confident of victory. Feinstein vetoed and protest demonstrations attacking the mayor brought national attention to the "spousal rights" issue. When some supervisors wavered, the projected override by the Board fell apart. New legislation was presented to the mayor, hopefully meeting her objections, within three days.

Feinstein remains silent on the new legislation, possibly awaiting the results of the February 1 hearing — which could again result in changes. While she may have lost considerable Gay support, the mayor continues to urge that she could not support the original Britt legislation. The mayor has said he could support "proper" legislation. The next move seems to be the mayor's.

Feinstein's Veto Stands

New Version Tabled, Spousal Rights Dead for Now

by Michael Benzry

The mayor's veto of the Domestic Partners legislation was not overturned at this week's Board of Supervisors meeting. Letting the veto stand was viewed as a victory for Mayor Feinstein's eleventh-hour veto December 8. The original legislation for all purposes is dead. Knowing he didn't have the eight votes he needed, Supervisor Harry Britt did not move to overturn the veto.

In addition, a revised piece of Britt legislation on domestic partners, introduced at the last Board meeting, received a similar fate. "We tabled it. We decided not to go into it now," he said.

But later, holding his fist at his side, Britt said, "It's not going to die."

Supervisor Britt calls for February hearings on his Gay marriage proposal.

The first legislation would have had city law use the term "domestic partner" everywhere "spouse" was referenced. It provided for a system of registering domestic partners, couples who were not married and not related. The measure passed November 30 with an 8-3 majority.

Though originally voting for the law, Supervisors Renne and Kennedy stated they would not vote against the veto. Other supervisors indicated privately they were not inclined to an override.

Britt had three weeks to come up with a version of the law that would attract two-thirds of the votes of the Board. With the holidays, it wasn't enough time. Britt said there would be new committee meetings in February on the subject. The revised legislation was broken in four parts, two ordinances and two resolutions. The new piece focuses on registration of domestic partners (anyone who qualifies — not just city employees). While seeming similar to the original, to some observers the thrust is significantly different.

OTHER BOARD BUSINESS

In the gallery were several men wearing religious collars and women with young children. They had come to witness the debate on the motion to proclaim January 22 Women's Reproduction Freedom Day. Supervisor Dolson spoke strongly against the measure, saying it was a day to celebrate abortion, which was murder.

Supervisor Silver said she could not understand how those against reproductive rights also tend to be against welfare for neglected and abandoned children. Several members of the gallery stood as the roll call vote was taken. The motion passed 6-5.

By the end of the meeting most of the business was for honorariums or was tabled. Harry Britt introduced a measure to send President Reagan a letter asking him not to recertify El Salvador as eligible for U.S. funds.

Supervisor Dolson, who was not re-elected, said his farewells.

In a lengthy tongue-in-cheek denial, he said, "I never made the vile charge that Harry Britt is a secret straight." After ten years on the Boards of Education and Supervisors, the conservative-voting Dolson said, "I won't say goodbye. I just say I'll see you."

Supervisor Lee Dolson relinquishes his seat at City Hall. The conservative lawmaker, who will be replaced by Bill Maher, made his final goodbyes. His record on Gay rights to Gays has been a dismal one. (Photo: Rink)

Gay Jewish Coalition Forms

In response to a recent statement issued by leaders of San Francisco's Jewish community in opposition to the domestic partnership legislation, local organizations met together and founded the Jewish Coalition for Lesbian and Gay Rights.

Taking immediate action, the Coalition has scheduled a meeting with representatives of the Board of Rabbis of Northern California. The Coalition plans to challenge the Board's recent statement in which ten rabbis maintain: "The Jewish tradition is based on the holiness of marriage and the maintenance of the nuclear family, and we must oppose any legislation which would undermine this strength."

The Coalition hopes to further educate the Jewish community on this and related issues by serving as a bridge between the Lesbian and Gay community and the Jewish community. The founding organizations include Congregation Ahavat Shalom, Congregation Sha'ar Zahav, the Jewish Feminist Conference, the Lesbian and Gay Jewish Activists, and the New Jewish Agenda.

Membership remains open to other concerned organizations as well as unaffiliated individuals. For further information, contact Hank Cohn at 824-5647.

Cops Raid Jaguar Book Store

"I hit the house light," Pofahl says. About 20 customers "came scurrying out." One customer, who spoke with clerk Hale, 25, outside the building, said he'd been "caught in the act." There were no arrests. The customer quoted one of the officers as saying, "The party's over" or "It's time to go, boys." Hale says he apologized to the customer.

Pofahl complained the officers never "offered any reason for the raid." But before the two officers inside were through routing customers in the backroom, Pofahl says, "I was a screaming queen at that point."

He remembers questioning Monroe while he was still holding the door open. "Are you bored? You just want to harass some fags?" Pofahl says Monroe answered defensively, insisting he had nothing to do with the raid but was only holding the door.

Hale said he "grabbed a piece of paper and got the badge numbers" while "John (Pofahl) did all the talking. John told 'em for sure it would be in the B.A.R. and they weren't going to get away with it."

Pofahl retold his story to the Stonewall Gay Democratic Club Executive Committee meeting Monday evening and received a full endorsement condemning the police action. The Alice B. Toklas Memorial Democratic Club Issues Committee Tuesday evening voted a similar motion.

Mission Station Captain Taylor, contacted last Wednesday, declined to comment on the case, since, he said, it had already been passed to Internal Affairs and the Chief's office.

But Internal Affairs Commander Richard Trueb, off work last week, told the B.A.R. Monday an "information bulletin" had been issued that "reinstated the officers on their right of access," explaining the distinction between a surprise permit inspection and violation of private premises without a search warrant.

Although he had not yet received any complaint to I.A.B., Trueb said as the case had been described to him. "Without a search warrant, entry in that fashion would have been inappropriate." Trueb said he had heard nothing about the officer's allegedly holding a knife during the incident but added knives were not regulation police equipment.

Neither book store clerk suggested Officer Cortes had aimed the knife at either of them, Pofahl guessing he may have intended to pick the lock on the private club's entrance with it. Nevertheless, he said, it was "quite intimidating looking, (his) holding that knife."

Jaguar manager Michael Bennett also expressed shock that a police officer would pull a knife on a store clerk. Pofahl had phoned Bennett after the cops had left — their mission over in about ten minutes — and kept the club closed until Michael arrived.

Neither Bennett nor Jaguar owner Ron Ernst seemed eager for much publicity over the incident. The Jaguar fought a celebrated permit fight just two years ago, winning the vote of eight city Supervisors upholding their permit for the membership club's second floor expansion. The vote was later rescinded after much furor in the straight press and the City Attorney's reinterpretation that the club had sought the wrong permit (on written advice from their office), thereby making the Supervisors' permit endorsement moot.

The club has since survived with a lower profile and without public harassment until last week.

'83 Parade Meeting

The Lesbian/Gay Freedom Day Parade Committee is holding a general membership meeting on Sunday, January 9, at the Women's Building (3543 18th Street) from 5-7p.m. The main topics to be discussed will be Float Safety Regulations, the choosing of a logo, and possible locations for an office site. Anyone wishing to submit an entry for the logo should attend this meeting, as the logo will be chosen that night. There is also a very strong need for a Recording Secretary. If anyone is interested in serving in this function, please contact the Parade Committee at 864-1869.

Gay Man Says 'Stop Treatment'

A psychiatrist visited Gresham to determine that he was "sane and rational," and then the living will and supplementary paperwork was signed, allowing him to die naturally from starvation. His doctors say he probably won't last more than ten days. He was disconnected from the feeding tube Monday. All he receives intravenously now is a saline and sugar solution to prevent dehydration and Valium to ease the pain.

Gresham decided on his own that death was preferable to living with pain and dependency the rest of his life. "I want to die with dignity," said Gresham. "I didn't want to linger and suffer, and live in a little cottage with my mother, and not have any control over my bowels and be hooked up to machines. I don't want to never be able to eat again, to have to watch people eat, to smell their food and see the commercials on TV. I don't want to never be able to go camping, never be able to go to the ocean, or do anything except be in that house with my mother. I decided that that was not living, that was just being a vegetable. I'm not going to live just half a life."

Gresham is as much in the dark about how he caught AIDS as his doctors are. To date, no one knows where AIDS came from or how you catch it. Many of its Gay male victims have histories of high drug use and a large number of sexual contacts. This profile doesn't fit all the victims, however, including Gresham.

"My sex life was very mild," said Gresham. "It wasn't any of that heavy, promiscuous nonsense. My doctor told me not to feel guilty, he said as far as they know, it's a virus and you can catch it like a cold, depending on an individual's immunity. So, the whole thing is, everybody's subject to getting it, no matter what they do or how much they take care of themselves."

Gresham was first diagnosed as having AIDS when he checked into the hospital the first time back in March 1982. He thought he might be in for about three days to get rid of whatever it was that was making him sick. It turned out he had pneumocystis carinii pneumonia, one of the opportunistic diseases common in AIDS patients. He was in the hospital for two months getting rid of it. At one point he considered himself close to death.

When he got out he decided to do something about changing the way he lived. He wanted to meet other men on a more meaningful level than he had in the past. As he said later, "If I had the chance all over, I certainly wouldn't be standing around in the bar looking for a piece of ass. I'd be back at home baking cookies."

Gresham joined an organization called Other Ways, which advertises itself as "a Gay social alternative." He had been familiar with it since its inception in 1979. But he only had a chance to attend two of its functions, because of repeated trips back to the hospital, including the final one.

Gresham is glad for the two experiences he did have. It was the beginning of what he wanted the rest of his life to be. "I realized that after ten years (in San Francisco) the same old-bodies were hanging around looking for whatever. I wanted nurturing. I wanted acceptance. I wanted love. I wanted to be needed. I wanted a place with people. I wanted to develop meaningful relationships and something that would give me a more quality lifestyle."

Members of Other Ways have made a point of visiting Gresham during his illness, even though few had met him earlier. Under Gresham's instructions, Other Ways will organize the memorial service. It will be a "celebration of life and death," according to Gresham. "People need to learn to accept death."

Gresham is currently being visited only by his sister and father. They are the only ones he wanted to see when he started to die. "I've delivered up all my responsibilities to others, now I just want them to give me my shots and let me fade away," he said.

As far as advice for the rest of us, Gresham offered this: "Do what you want to do in life, before it's too late," he said. "I had no idea that when I closed my apartment door and heard the lock click, that it would be the last time I would ever hear it."

Congress Appropriates $2 Million for AIDS

The Gay Rights National Lobby's (GRNL) effort to increase funding for research on Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome (AIDS) met with tremendous success during the lame duck session of the Congress. Congress passed a Continuing Resolution funding the government for the rest of the fiscal year which runs through September 30, 1983. In the Continuing Resolution, $2 million was appropriated for AIDS research to be conducted by the Center for Disease Control (CDC). In fiscal year 1982, only $500,000 for AIDS research was provided. The funds for AIDS represent a significant victory, since there were only two other new health related programs funded during the entire 97th Congress.

The CDC funds will be used to expand monitoring activities in an attempt to learn more about the disease. AIDS has been identified in nearly 800 cases nationwide resulting in almost 300 deaths with two new cases reported each day. Medical researchers still know little about the cause, mode of transmission, treatment or cure for AIDS. It is known, however, that the syndrome causes a profound suppression of a critical part of the body's immune system.

The coalition assembled by GRNL to support increased funding, according to its press release, was an important element in the success of the lobbying effort. Included among the groups which pledged their support for AIDS funds were the American Public Health Association, the American Psychiatric Association, the National Association of Social Workers, the American Psychological Association and the National Hemophilia Foundation. GRNL plans to expand this coalition in order to increase awareness and support for AIDS research.

In the continued effort to expand the federal commitment to AIDS, GRNL will be focusing increased attention on the National Institutes of Health (NIH). While the Center for Disease Control has made AIDS one of its top priorities, NIH continues to lag behind in devoting resources to AIDS research. An increased commitment by the National Institutes of Health is essential because NIH performs the research necessary to gain an understanding of the medical aspects of the disease while CDC concentrates on the surveillance of incidence and other important statistical gathering functions. GRNL intends to further utilize the field network in attaining this goal.

"Our goal is to turn the ever increasing concern of the Gay community about AIDS into effective political action," said Steve Endean, GRNL Executive Director.

Ed Asner & Virginia Apuzzo Headline GGBA Dinner

Final details have been confirmed for "Installation 1983" — the Ninth Annual Installation of Directors and Awards Dinner of the Golden Gate Business Association.

The annual event is scheduled for Monday, January 31, at the Hyatt Regency San Francisco at Embarcadero Center in the Golden Gateway Ballroom. Featured speaker for the evening is Ed Asner, Emmy Award-winning actor, star of the "Lou Grant" television series, and outspoken humanitarian. Joining Asner will be Virginia Apuzzo, the newly-elected Executive Director of the National Gay Task Force and Executive Director of the Fund for Human Dignity, Inc.

Ginny Apuzzo will headline GGBA '83 Installation at the Hyatt Regency.

The program emcee will be Carol Roberts, a Bay Area favorite whose comedy as the "Food Sexual" makes her a natural for the dinner event.

The evening also includes the presentation of both

NGRA Enters Ohio Case

National Gay Rights Advocates has filed a brief urging the reinstatement of a guidance counselor in Mad River, Ohio. The school district there refused to renew Marjorie Rowland's contract solely because of her sexual orientation.

NGRA has asserted that Rowland's constitutional rights were violated. Leonard Graff, NGRA Legal Director, said: "There are court decisions that establish the legal rights of public employees. The First Amendment protects school teachers from discharge based on what they say and believe."

The school district's position is that a person like Rowland could not be respected and therefore would be ineffective. Jean O'Leary, Executive Director of NGRA, said: "This attitude is a perfect example of prejudice based on outdated myths." O'Leary further stated that "NGRA is committed to fighting this type of employment discrimination."

The lawsuit was filed in May of 1975 in the U.S. District Court and Rowland won a judgment in excess of $40,000 in the fall of 1981. The Mad River school district appealed the decision and the case is now before the U.S. Court of Appeals in Cincinnati, Ohio.

New Year's in the Castro

by Konstantin Berlandt

New Year's parties, the cold weather, and maybe a sprinkling of KS paranoia kept the crowd at 18th and Castro at midnight much smaller this year than in several previous, but the Sisters of Perpetual Indulgence were there, nevertheless, in red, white, and blue, stars and flaming pink satin sash — Sisters Mary Media, Florence Nightmare, Chanel 2001, and several others snaking their way into the intersection, stopping traffic for the crowd to take the streets.

Champagne flowed, whistles blew, kisses too; buses honked and were let through.

But soon the crowd had thinned again as some had split back to the warmth of the bars, more parties and whatever else people do to ring in the New Year.

At the Jaguar Bookstore party in the backroom, photographer Fisher Ross was laughing at the refreshment counter as the boys in the backroom were pumping away, despite a 3-cop raid last week.

At parties sampled by this reporter, many made a mellow evening of this New Year.

Parade Co-Chair Linda Boyd and her lover, former Parade Co-Chair Barbara Cameron, said they spent a quiet evening at home watching the Christmas tree lights twinkle.

But Mayor's Criminal Justice Council member David Custead may have been the mellowest of all, having fallen asleep shortly after 10 and not waking up until after 2:00 in '83.

Meanwhile, Charles Hopkins was dancing the night away at the I-Beam, and then says he fell into bed with a friend where they remained — sleeping and fucking — until Sunday morning. Or was it Tuesday?

HERPES BREAKTHROUGH

Portland, Oregon:
A breakthrough in the treatment of herpes has occurred. HERPEX, a new healing skin ointment (formulated by Virachem) has produced amazing results. Users report complete arrest of the virus process when HERPEX is applied as soon as the early symptoms are felt. When applied after tissue degeneration has begun (even with severe skin lesions and pain present), relief occurs within minutes and healing proceeds rapidly. HERPEX is without doubt the most effective treatment for herpes symptoms available.

This non-prescription gel contains a number of natural ingredients whose effectiveness is well documented in the treatment of herpes. These include the amino acid lysine, lithium chloride, zinc, meserum and comfrey. Based on research in diverse health fields ranging from tissue physiology to immunology, development of HERPEX was intended to promote normal healing processes while aiding the natural immune response locally. The result is this outstandingly effective treatment—it works!

HERPEX can be obtained for $14.95 (plus $2 shipping and handling) by mail. Order from Breakthrough Products Research, Inc., P.O. Box 10887, Portland, Oregon 97210, or by phone. Call toll free 1-800-838-8246, ext. 556, in Kansas, 1-800-368-8421, ext. 556.

CHECK FOR PARASITES

★ In April of 1982 I was diagnosed as having Kaposi's sarcoma. During the very thorough medical examination that followed, CMV virus (cytomegalovirus) and an intestinal parasite (E. histolytica) was discovered. At that time I was not sick and was not aware of any intestinal problems. Within 30 days, I was put on 3-drug chemotherapy for my KS. I was also treated for parasites.

Immediately, I started to read all the published information in medical journals about AIDS, Kaposi's sarcoma, CMV, and intestinal parasites. In August of 1982 I discovered a case discussion of a gay Danish man diagnosed with Kaposi's sarcoma and also intestinal parasites. After the treatment for intestinal parasites the KS went into remission and after 23 months the patient is reported to be "clinically well" by his doctors. The patient received no chemotherapy for the KS. Because of this information, I immediately stopped my chemotherapy. Could it be that chemotherapy treatments do additional damage to an already depressed immune system?

It is now January 1983 and I am free of KS and am extremely healthy. My immune system shows signs of recovery. Could it be that the doctors and medical experts are looking in the wrong direction in uncovering the cause of AIDS? Could it be that the real underlying problem is intestinal-parasites???

The following changes in my life style have also been made:

1. No sex or exchange of body fluids (including saliva) until my immune system has fully recovered. I know that my immune system has been compromised and I am not going to insult it with further diseases or viruses.

2. Megadosing of vitamin supplements. This includes Zinc because it has been demonstrated to regulate the immune system. Also included is a very high Vitamin C supplement taken four times a day. Vitamin C has been shown to inhibit virus growth and also to inhibit cancer. It also fortifies the body by promoting the production of interferon naturally.

We are now watching closely other patients diagnosed with KS that have elected not to receive chemotherapy. They are also on heavy vitamin supplementation. At this time these patients have not had a spread of KS and are on treatment for intestinal parasites.

Some local doctors that have become aware of the cellular suppression caused by parasites are now reviewing the role of parasites in AIDS. Unfortunately, this group is very small. Many doctors are still not treating "nonpathological" parasites. Some doctors are even testing their patients for parasites.

If any are worried about AIDS, I would suggest that you read the article that appeared in the December 30 issue of the B.A.R. (Parasitism and Immune Suppression: An AIDS Connection?). A good way to start the New Year would be to be checked out by a doctor for intestinal parasites. Also included would be preventive measures to preclude becoming infected (or re-infected).

GYM JIBE

★ Says John Durak of the City Athletic Club in the last issue of B.A.R.: "Let's face it, to be Gay in San Francisco you have to join a gym. It's a competitive world out there."

But if we were proud of being Gay, would we try to make ourselves into a mirror image of butch straight men? If we know how to love each other, would we need the fantasy merchants? Has the Gay world become nothing but a big gym — and one from which there is no exit?

Loosen up and free the woman within. Tootsie.

ED NOTE: Would the same logic apply to the securing of a Gay pseudo marriage certificate?

PHONE SEX

★ I'd like to let it be known that I'm disheartened and dismayed by the recent advertising hype in the B.A.R. and elsewhere for "The Connector" and other phone sex services. Before, we only saw a few sad personal ads, soliciting obscene phone callers as substitutes for real lovers.

Now, it seems to be big business (and big bucks: VISA and M/C accepted) and it scares me because it exploits lonely people, providing them, for a fee, with only an audible semblance of the personal contact they need so desperately.

I realize I will be accused by some of being judgmental. The old "each to his own fantasy" argument. True, it can be fun if it is just an occasional diversion or if you've just had extensive face surgery. But it also has the potential of becoming a dangerous illusion. And, I should confess at this point that, for me, sex is totally visual and tactile. The sexiest voice on the phone does nothing to stir my hormones. So these "services" are not for me, but who am I to say they're not for others? Right?

Roger Raiche
Berkeley, CA

I do so because I'm seriously concerned that this "alternative" deceives people into thinking that they are actually having authentic human contact, temporarily satiating their desires for sexual release and ridding them of the urge to go out and seek the live person they really need to fulfill themselves. Even more disturbing, though, is it seems another blatant example of gays taking unfair advantage of their brothers by capitalizing on their loneliness and/or disappointment with the bar scene. They even go so far as to say "afraid of catching something?" thereby bankrolling on our fears as well.

We all know how difficult it can be at times to find significant contact in the bars and baths, but PLEASE, let's not just give up and sit at home, jerking off with one hand and holding a cold piece of plastic to our ears with the other. It's a pathetic substitute for warm manly love.

WE BLEW IT

★ Even by the admittedly low standards of San Francisco journalism, your coverage of my roommate's suicide was particularly poor.

Suicide notes are not intended for publication. In fact, they are the most private of all forms of communication. They can be quoted, or paraphrased if necessary, but to publish the whole letter is an invasion of privacy. Richard's emotional life was so closely guarded that to spill his last communication all over San Francisco is grotesque.

The article seemed to me to romanticize suicide. Virtually every gay person I know has had to deal with suicide, either their own attempts or that of friends. Much of our lifestyle borders on the self-destructive. I expected that gay people in positions of responsibility at this stage in history would be less glib, and more sensitive. I was naive. It is nice, however, to be reminded that I am not hopelessly jaded.

I do not understand how, as a professional journalist, you could write a front page story of his death on the basis of only one interview. Consequently, there are several inaccuracies, as well as significant omissions.

There was one other person who Richard told about having cancer.

Richard was not asked to leave our apartment. He told me two months ago that he was planning to move out around the first of the year.

Your article also stated that he was a jock in high school. Richard was also active in high school theater, but was so hassled about that by the real jocks that he never went back to acting. This split was to go right up to his suicide note. Like many other faggots, his greatest role was the one he presented to the straight world. I think that he could not keep that role when he found out about KS, and that's why he killed himself.

You had a great chance to write a sensitive piece about choice, life, disease, the state of gay life, and the panic that this plague is causing. You blew it.

Sean McShee
San Francisco

ED NOTE: You are right on one point. We see suicide as one of the legitimate options in dealing with AIDS and opportunistic diseases. That is not to say we suggest it, nor is it to say we condemn it. We respect the decision of the person who makes it.

HYGIENE

★ The vehement attacks on those who fail to douche before sex makes me wonder. Douching is a healthy, considerate gesture, but what about the fucker? Has his cock, ass and balls been properly washed and rinsed? It is too common in sex palaces to see a cock pulled out of one asshole and shoved into another ass or mouth. The Grand Wizard may not like the aesthetics of seeing shit, but tasting it is something else (not to mention the combined cock/anal/salivary juices of a dozen partners).

Hygiene involves all participants.

There are other considerations. Douching can be a messy, painful, time-consuming process that really requires the privacy of one's own bathroom. Not all sexual encounters are planned in advance. Even a well-douched anal tract is not antiseptic. A rigorous sexual workout will inevitably contaminate a cock even when it doesn't appear shitty. Ironically, a shitty encounter would at least encourage a thorough cleansing afterward, a practice too seldom seen.

I also find it inconsistent that someone who wants to "plough" my ass is afraid of setting his blade into a little nite-soil. How quickly this tough macho type reverts to the rather effeminate consideration of aesthetics at the sight of (horror) some shit. Really now, what did one expect to find up there? And wasn't it only back in the Fifties that the query "Stir my fudge?" was considered a crude but valid come on? Men are so delicate nowadays.

And to "La... Douches of Poo-Poo... etc." yes, a walk on the beach or an evening by a fire with a friend is more memorable than any multiplication of all my sleazier moments. But the latter is so much easier.

New Yorkers Warn AIDS Victims

A group of Gay men with AIDS has taken out a large-sized ad in the New York Native entitled "Warning."

Calling themselves GMWA, they addressed their advertising to other Gay men with AIDS.

Identifying themselves as AIDS victims, they believe it crucial "to begin to share with others like ourselves our personal experiences in getting treatment." The ad lists nine separate warnings, each warning is followed by medical references. The warnings deal chiefly with treatments, remedies that are currently in practice — their potentials and their dangers.

THE WARNINGS

1. If you are diagnosed with Kaposi's sarcoma, chemotherapy may not be the best treatment. Chemotherapy is immunosuppressive, and patients receiving chemotherapy are more susceptible to severe opportunistic infections. These infections claim more lives than Kaposi's sarcoma. Three out of four men with KS die of severe opportunistic infections within two years — and most of these men will have received chemotherapy. Chemotherapy may in fact destroy what is left of the immune system. (If you have a tumor that is immediately life-threatening, the risks of chemotherapy may be the only option. Discuss with your doctor what you can do to lower your risks for developing opportunistic infections.)

2. As an experimental treatment for immunologic dysfunction, interferon in fact be harmful. It both stimulates and suppresses the immune system and no one knows what the effects will be! Why should Gay men be guinea pigs? Some of those who offer interferon as a treatment are not warning their patients of possible risks. This is unethical.

3. Plasmapheresis may help in the treatment of AIDS. The risks involved are minimal and, unlike chemotherapy, plasmapheresis does not destroy the immune system. It seems strange that certain doctors have withheld plasmapheresis from dangerously ill Gay men while over the past three years many Gay men have been paid to receive plasmapheresis on a regular basis in order to make the Hepatitis B Vaccine — with no apparent ill effects. Unfortunately, speculation among a new, mutant virus has caused unnecessary panic among some lab technicians in local medical centers; this has hindered the availability of plasmapheresis, not only because it is expensive, but because there is fear that Gay men with AIDS will "contaminate" lab workers as well as some medical equipment with this (alleged) new mutant virus. Our limited experience with plasmapheresis has been quite positive. Discuss it with your doctor.

4. If you have low blood platelets and your doctor offers you prednisone or suggests removing your spleen, you would do well to seek another two or three opinions. Published medical case studies indicate that this treatment may kill you.

5. Published medical reports prove that ultraviolet light is definitely immunosuppressive. It would be wise to stay out of the sun and tanning parlors.

6. It is dangerously irresponsible for any sexually active Gay man to be without health insurance. Gay men who were dying have been denied admittance to local hospitals because they had no health insurance. Be aware that some Gay men with histories of sexually transmitted diseases have been recently rejected for health coverage.

7. AIDS is a new syndrome and there are NO authorities. Clearly, much of what is being done is not working. According to CDC, the survival rate for victims of opportunistic infections is less than sixteen months. We urge an unbiased source, such as the Native, to hold a public forum on treatment, and we urge you to participate in any such forum. Meanwhile, educate yourself by going outside the Gay press. Get as broad a view and as many different opinions as possible. AIDS involves several different areas of medical specialization. Your physician should definitely encourage you to seek other opinions, not only in his or her area of medical expertise.

8. If you suspect that you are immunosuppressed or if you have been promiscuous for more than the past three years, look and keep looking for a physician who will do a complete testing of your blood for indicators of immunosuppression. Should you find that you are immunosuppressed but asymptomatic (as many promiscuous Gay men are), then it is possible for your immune system to heal itself before the immunosuppression progresses further and becomes self-sustaining. In some cases the immunosuppression is only transitory; nevertheless, the only way the immune system can heal is by ending promiscuous exposure immediately and completely. Some immunosuppressed Gay men who have stopped indiscriminate sex are beginning to show signs that their immune system is healing.

9. To date, there is not even one support group or health crisis center in our New York City Gay community that is providing support to immunosuppressed Gay men who want to break the habit of promiscuous behavior, nor does the community itself encourage such a change. We must care enough about ourselves; obviously, others — particularly those who advise mere moderation of promiscuous behavior — do not care about us.

Fringe Benefits Case

Gay Sues State for Mate's Dental Benefits

Attorney Roberta Achtenberg reported this week that the Lesbian Rights Project initiated its first suit on behalf of a Gay male.

In Sacramento, Achtenberg charged that Boyce Hinman, 44, a state employee, was denied health benefits of a family partner. The denial was called unconstitutional and a violation of Governor Jerry Brown's Executive Order which forbade discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation.

Achtenberg, staff attorney for the Project, charged, "Homosexual state employees are underpaid because they don't get the same level of compensation for their partners that heterosexuals are entitled to."

Hinman, a ten-year employee of the Employment Development Department, was rebuffed by state officials when he tried to enroll his partner of 12 years, Larry S. Beatty, in a prepaid health care plan providing groups for dental work.

After being turned down by his department supervisors, Hinman appealed to the Department of Personnel Administration, which also denied his claim, according to Hinman's lawsuit, filed Wednesday in Sacramento County Superior Court.

Although Hinman and Beatty consider themselves "family members," Hinman was told that only spouses or dependents "under existing contracts or statutes" are qualified for coverage under the plan.

State employee plaintiff Boyce Hinman

Achtenberg stressed that the issue is one of equal compensation. Although Mr. Hinman and Mr. Beatty have been together for over twelve years, they co-own the home in which they live, share the common necessities of life, and each considers the other to be his domestic partner, they are forbidden by California law to marry. Therefore, Mr. Hinman cannot provide the benefits which are an essential aspect of his employment compensation to his family partner, as can a heterosexual state employee in the same position.

Co-petitioner in the suit is Advocates for Gay and Lesbian State Employees, an officially recognized state employees' association, which opposes the Department of Personnel Administration policy which prevents its members from being eligible for the health benefits which are available to heterosexual state employees.

Since homosexual state employees are compensated less than their heterosexual counterparts because of their sexual orientation, the policy violates the California Constitution's equal protection guarantee and the Governor's Executive Order, B-54-79, which prohibits discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation.

The suit asks that Mr. Hinman be permitted to provide dental benefits to his family partner, and that the Department of Personnel Administration develop an administrative procedure for determining eligibility for dental benefits for family partners of state employees which does not discriminate on the basis of sexual orientation.

Hinman said he filed the suit now because "the time was right," politically. "I want the benefits for myself and my family partner, but I also want to be of benefit to my community at large."

FBI Raids, Media Slanders NAMBLA

The FBI, various police forces, and the media have launched an attack on a legal civil rights organization, the North American Man/Boy Love Association. On December 19, according to a NAMBLA press release, police raided three Manhattan apartments, and FBI agents visited nearly a dozen men in New York, inquiring about men and youths and attempting to link NAMBLA to illegal activities.

The latest police scam has been to suggest that a photograph seized in a December 3 raid in Wareham, MA, was of Etan Patz, a New York City boy who disappeared in 1979. The police know that any allegation of a connection between Etan Patz's disappearance and NAMBLA is a lie, and yet they are deliberately feeding this false information to the media. "This is a cruel and cynical hoax," says NAMBLA spokesman Dave Ingalls. "The media has sensationalized this hoax and falsely portrayed NAMBLA as a 'shadowy' group, a 'sex club,' and a 'porno ring.' The authorities have obviously targeted NAMBLA for destruction."

One of the apartments raided on December 19 was that of Bob Rhodes, where the NAMBLA telephone is located.

Files and NAMBLA newsletters were seized. "They even took the file on NAMBLA's Freedom of Information suit against the FBI," stated Rhodes. The courts have refused to release any of the FBI files on the organization on the grounds that the FBI's "investigation" of NAMBLA is still going on. The U.S. Postal Service terminated its own investigation of the group last year on the grounds that it found no evidence of violation of laws governing the use of the mails. The affidavit on the basis of which the December 19 raid was made is sealed and cannot be examined, leaving NAMBLA in the position of being unable to answer its accusers.

NAMBLA is a public and legal organization. It was founded in 1978 in response to the extreme oppression of boys and men involved in consensual and loving relationships. It is up front about its goals, and its meetings are open to the public. NAMBLA attempts to educate society about the benevolent nature of man/boy love, and supports the liberation of persons of all ages from sexual prejudice, exploitation, and oppression. NAMBLA is not and never has been, insists Ingalls, involved in prostitution, the production or distribution of pornography, or the transportation of minors for illegal purposes.

Ingalls also complained that the December 3 arrest of three members in Wareham, MA, has been turned by the media into a raid of a NAMBLA "chapter" which, in fact, never existed. "Media reports have been based solely on police sources," says Ingalls. "No media attempt has been made to contact NAMBLA." One of the three arrested, David Groat, has twice been set up by guards and beaten, once into unconsciousness, while in "protective custody."

Yet these vicious assaults, says NAMBLA, have received no media coverage whatsoever.

Free Health Screening for Seniors

The present state of the economy and the unwillingness of many insurance carriers to cover the cost of routine physical examinations cause many older persons to avoid visiting their doctors until specific symptoms of illness appear.

Those seniors who visit Mount Zion Hospital and Medical Center's senior health screening program learn that regular exams are a good idea. Many of the persons seen in the free screening clinic (over 700 since the program began late in 1979) discover that they have treatable illnesses; others receive the reassuring news that they are in good health.

Data available from the first 400 patients seen in the clinic show that 16 percent were diabetic; 49 percent had high blood pressure; 42 percent required considerable dental treatment; 16 percent suffered from cataracts and 47 percent had significant hearing loss.

The screening is free to the client; Medicare is billed for this one-time service when appropriate. For information or to make an appointment, call 567-6600, ext. 2306.

Herb Donaldson Lands Muni Bench

Africa) and made London his "second city." It was no secret that he has sought an appointment such as a judgeship that would more firmly solidify his desire to have a community service base away from his coffee business.

QUIET LIFESTYLE

Donaldson never made much money as an attorney but with his lover, Jim Hardcastle, he was able to establish the thriving Capricorn Coffees business. Hardcastle died unexpectedly of cancer in 1978. Since his lover's death, Donaldson has traveled outside of the country (South America, Europe, great sense of humor in private conversations. He told Bay Area Reporter, "You know, one of our failings in the Gay community is that we do not use enough satire about ourselves. We need to ask ourselves regularly if what we are doing today will really be that important six months from now. I love the Sisters of Perpetual Indulgence because they are able to poke fun at the hypocrites in life. We need more of that."

One of the reasons Donaldson is not widely known in the Gay community is that his lifestyle tends to be reserved. At 56, he prefers lively dinner conversations with a few friends, playing classics on his piano, or attendance at a church function. There is nothing somber about Donaldson, although he can show his anger — as he recently did when he personally told the Mayor of his displeasure at her veto of spousal rights legislation.

Often in the background as he observes and listens at community meetings, Donaldson prefers to reveal his Several people outside of the Gay community expressed excitement over Donaldson's appointment. Velam Petersilie, a woman who has worked with Donaldson at Bethany Methodist, said, "He is so concerned about people. He is such a joy to work with." Sharon George, a co-director of the SF Mental Health Association, urged, "While Herb may be quiet and this may be a disadvantage to him, he has such credibility."

Donaldson takes the Municipal judgeship formerly held by Maxine Mackler Chesney, who was elevated by Brown to Superior Court. The governor has appointed two upfront Gay judges in Los Angeles and had placed Lesbian activist Mary Morgan on the Municipal Bench here.

If there is a negative side to the Donaldson appointment, it is that it may be the last appointment of a known homosexual to the judiciary for some time. Governor Brown made numerous appointments of minority people during his tenure but the same is not expected from Governor George Deukmejian.

In a recent feature in Boston's GCN entitled "Franklin W. Dixon Made Me Queer," writer Michael Bronski went into detail about his early fantasies and how he found a wealth of jerkoff material in the school library.

By the time he was 14 he had worked his way up to Edgar Allen Poe and remembers being thrown into "a real maelstrom of sexual frenzy" by the ending of The Narrative of A. Gordon Pym.

Bronski's later homoerotic and sadomasochistic fantasies were fed by such great works as Cooper's Leatherstocking Tales "ruined only by possibly the worst prose in the history of American fiction," the flogging scenes in Two Years Before the Mast, the brutal tortures in Uncle Tom's Cabin and most of the goings-on in Melville's Moby Dick. "Here I was on the brink of manhood ruined—delightfully ruined—by books."

Bronski traces his start in homoerotic to the Hardy Boys, that famous series about teenage amateur sleuths. "I was always waiting for more exact details of the blond, 17-year-old Joe and his slightly older, dark-haired brother. I was especially pleased when they had to undress in the boathouse and swim out to a small boat in The Mystery at Devil's Paw," recalls Bronski.

"The situation was even more gratifying because the frontispiece (usually the only picture in the book) showed both brothers in near undress. And believe me, it was really hard to find any pictures of men in their underwear in the 1950's."

Although his tastes later graduated to Nancy Drew detective stories (she seemed a bit smarter than the Hardy boys and drove a red roadster), Bronski was really attracted to the father figures in both series.

The father was always described as lean and graying, handsome, mature, respected, and to a pubescent mind, incredibly sexy. "I was reaching an age where innocence was no longer charming and childlike and was getting a pretty good idea of what it was I did want to do with Fenton Hardy and Carson Drew."

"I remember one scene in The Phantom Freighter where Fenton was trapped in a small room and I imagined Fenton and I, alone. I'm not

Liberty and Death — Can They Be Separated? or The Grave Side of Gay Life or Lorelei Changes Her Tune

by Steve Warren

Working on a "travel piece" for a national Gay magazine to encourage San Francisco tourism, I'm feeling like the legendary Lorelei whose siren song lured travelers to their deaths. Perhaps telling you the other side of the story will ease my conscience.

My best friend compares the situation to Death in Venice, where the bureaucrats denied the existence of the plague while the streets were being sprayed with disinfectant.

Indeed the party is still going on. It's business as usual at the baths and sex clubs. As long as there are two Gay men left alive those two are going to have sex (unless, of course, one is too old or too fat or projects the wrong image — or worse yet, they have already had each other).

For several months I too ignored the articles and the talk about AIDS, KS, etc., turning quickly past the newspaper pages that tried to break through my mental block; but we all have our limits. I reached mine after hearing of too many victims who were friends, friends of friends or men whose work I was familiar with. My threshold of paranoia is higher than many, but lower than those of people who still haven't become concerned about what's happening.

What's happening is that the Gay movement has reached another plateau: we have our own fatal illness. As the Blacks got sickle cell anemia along with freedom and women got toxic shock syndrome in tandem with equality, we also have an exclusive disease that can take away even more than society giveth.

Once we recognize the questions raised by this new threat, we have to come up with answers for ourselves. Science doesn't yet know what causes AIDS, but it certainly seems to be transmitted through both blood and sexual contact. Whether one unlucky trick can do the trick or some cumulative effect is involved remains to be seen, but either way lowering our number of contacts will raise our odds for survival.

My own temporary answer has been to become semi-celibate. I once thought of monogamy and masturbation as fates worse than death, but that was when there appeared to be viable options in between the extremes of M & M and death. Until I can find someone to be monogamous with, I'm going to be more selective than in the past: all those beauties I used to think of as "to die for" are more resistible now that that phrase has become a literal possibility. The public sex palaces were fun when penicillin and A-200 could take care of any unwelcome souvenirs; now indulging in direct or indirect sexual contact with a hundred men in a single night hardly seems worth the risk.

Naturally a "politically correct" approach to the situation has evolved, and just as naturally I seem to have gravitated to the other side. The PC's see articles such as this one as a threat to our liberation. If they're right, if all we have been fighting for is the right to have sex whenever, wherever and with whom ever we choose, why did they get so upset when CBS television announced that fact to the nation?

The "Gay community" is still in a relatively early stage of transition, and no one can guess at this point what lies at the end of the road. Just as some pre-liberation Gays are barricaded in their closets suffering from terminal culture shock, those of us who are out today won't recognize what the next generation of Gays has become in 20 years. Some of us will adapt, and it's just possible that promiscuity will be what kills off the dinosaurs among us who don't.

Then again, perhaps the cause of AIDS will be discovered and a simple cure found that leaves it no more menacing than old fashioned gonorrhea. Nothing could make me happier than to find that news on the front page of this very issue, so I can laugh along with you as I read this column.

If not, weigh the unknown facts and consider varying opinions; but don't let me or anyone else make a decision for you. True liberation is the freedom to make your own choices about matters that affect your life.

Meanwhile, have a happy new year. I hope it's not your last.

HEALTH SHORTS

Cancer

by Charles E. Hall, Ph.D.

Recently there seems to be a lot of discussion of "Gay" diseases: Kaposi's sarcoma, AIDS (Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome), herpes and others. Some persons seem to have taken the incidence of these diseases among Gay men as another excuse for their homophobia.

I would like to take these people to task for their narrow-minded perception of reality.

First, to have "Gay" diseases there would need to be some basic biological difference between "Gay" and "straight" men. Apparently there is no such difference, since no medical difference has been found during the last 2,000 years. No difference has been found despite considerable effort and research by some very scientifically minded homophobes. Even the American Psychological Association and the American Psychiatric Association have given up calling queers "sick" just because they are queer.

Second, there is currently an epidemic of cancerous disease in the United States. This became apparent in 1976 when the U.S. government announced that there was a 5% increase in cancer in 1975 when the annual increase had been 1% for twenty years. This five-fold increase was a red flag to biostatisticians like myself. I became alarmed and got out epidemiology statistics and Poisson distribution and predicted that by 1980 about one-third of the U.S. population would have cancer. By 1978 the government prediction was that 24% (one-fourth) of us would die of cancer. Apparently I was correct. Early this year I heard that the government had announced that three out of five (60%) of the population alive now could expect to die of cancer.

That is an epidemic.

Kaposi's sarcoma is only one small part of that epidemic. That epidemic is much more widespread than just a few hundred Gay men in San Francisco, New York, and Los Angeles. And it affects more than the skin. It is affecting all the organs of the human body among male, female, straight, Gay, children, adults, and all the strata of society. Furthermore, no one seems to have the first clue as to what causes it. As a statistician of 25 years, I cannot imagine any research technique which would enable the scientific community to decide what the cause or causes of the epidemic are. Even if the Defense Department budget were to be spent on research, I doubt that the cause could be located.

It is obvious to many of us diet-conscious people that the cause lies within the multitude of poisonous chemicals used by the American food industry: EDTA, BHA, BHT, sodium propionate, sodium polysorbate, polysorbate 80, DDT, malathion, etcetera. A trip to the grocery store to read the list of ingredients in our foodstuffs will amaze and appal anyone. A look at the advertisements in an agribusiness magazine will show you what chemicals you will eat in your next salad. For some things, it is necessary to have a college degree in biochemistry just to pronounce the names. These things are poisons put there to kill what eats the food and preserve it for human consumption. Then we are expected to eat it.

I don't.

Rachel Carson was the prophet of this epidemic and warned us in her book Silent Spring.

Thirdly, where in all this disease etiology of "Gay" and "straight" men do we put bisexual men? According to the Kinsey Report they were 24% of all men in 1947. There are more of them now and most of them are nice married men and fathers of families. Where in the epidemic do we fit all these fath-

KONSTANTIN BERLANDT

A Gay President by the Year 2000? A Queen's guard who poses as a Queen? A Gay man in nun's habit running for office in San Francisco? Only in the tabloids, The National Enquirer and the imitative National Examiner.

The Enquirer in their year-end issue (12/28) writes up Sister Boom Boom's candidacy for supervisor here under the simple headline "UGH!" On the next page the mother of sextuplets declares in a red headline, "I feel wrapped in a blanket of love."

But on the previous page, above the classifieds, Paul F. Levy writes: "In a sickening blow to morality and decency, 23,000 San Francisco voters cast their ballots for a Gay man — who parades around dressed as a nun! Shockingly the candidate, 'Sister Boom Boom,' came in ninth — just four places short of winning."

Levy describes Boom Boom as "a member of the super-sicko 'Sisters of Perpetual Indulgence,' a weird group of male Gays who walk the streets of San Francisco in nun's habits."

Levy also quotes Father Miles Riley, director of information for the Roman Catholic Archdiocese of San Francisco, fuming, "It's a sacrilege. It makes you want to get sick!" Riley was in the press earlier in December explaining local Archbishop John Quinn's public opposition to ers, brothers, and sons who make love with women and men both? Are these apparently "straight" men, carrying these dreaded "Gay" diseases home to their families? Apparently not. Or at least it's not noticeable in the statistics about "straight" men.

My own guess for the appearance of these diseases among Gay men is that many single Gay men live life in the proposed domestic partners legislation that could have legally validated Gay and Lesbian marriages.

"Even those understanding of Gays are repulsed by the 'sisters,'" Levy writes, citing a letter to the Bay Area Reporter that calls them "an eyesore on life."

The Enquirer writer (quite possibly using a pseudonym) also remembers one Sister's public burning of an American flag at a Gay male "beauty" contest several months ago, and the Sisters' appearance at a "memorial service for four real nuns who were murdered in El Salvador." Levy labels the Sisters' appearance at the El Salvador-dorean protest "a ghastly case of shocking insensitivity."

The article concludes with a quote from "a leading Catholic layman, who asked not to be named for fear of reprisals," who repeats, "This city is a moral cesspool... and getting worse. The Devil is hanging around here!"

But replies Sister Boom Boom midway through the Enquirer diatribe, "I don't worry about it too much. There are people who get upset. That's par for the course."

Meanwhile, the National Examiner's John Turner in a Dec. 14 article quotes another anonymous "long-time political expert" predicting Gays will elect one of their own by the turn of the century.

First citing former Vice President Walter Mondale's appearance at a September Human Rights Campaign Fund dinner in New York and a quote about Gay clout from Advocate writer Larry Bush, the unnamed "expert" warns, "Don't think that the election of a homosexual president is all that remote. The way these people are swarming out of the closet, and growing in numbers, if they want to go after it in ten or fifteen years they could very well put one of their own in the White House without too much trouble."

This expert continues: "Their candidate might be a closet Gay who's kept his perversion secret, but his fellow Gays would know he was one of them."

Asks the Examiner, "A limp wrist on the atomic button instead of a firm hand?"

In the January 4 issue of "America's fastest growing weekly," Examiner writer Lewis Clifton exposes "The man who would be Queen" — the after hours shenanigans of former royal bodyguard Commander Michael Trestrail, 52.

According to Michael Rauch, 37, who "shared a twisted 17-year homosexual relationship" with Trestrail, the former guard "would ask me to wait in the lounge of his home. Then he would return a few minutes later wearing a cheap tiara on his head. He had on stockings and black high-heeled shoes. He just walked around the room in a sort of regal way. As he paraded 'round, he insisted I called him 'Ma'am' when I spoke to him. I suppose he thought it was an imitation of the way the Queen walked."

In the 1983 Predictions issue of the Enquirer, now on the stands, "the most outrageous wedding of the year" is featured on page 3 — Tula, born Barry Cossey, and Eva Robbins, born Roberto Coatti, both high fashion model transsexuals, one who's kept her male genitalia. One of the wedding Farah Fawcett-type blondes appeared in the James Bond thriller For Your Eyes Only.

Fun reading for those who are bored with the straightness of their own lives. ■ polish.

The modern "shake" no longer contains milk and so by law cannot be called a "milkshake" any more. Proper terminology would be "cellulose shake." Swallow that one!

All in all, it is my opinion that the terminology "Gay diseases" was invented by the successors of Anita Bryant. Those people need the same treatment Gay people gave Anita: a pie in the face! ■

The Changing Guards

WAYNE FRIDAY

This first week of the new year brings a number of significant changes in the political scene for California. In Sacramento, one of the state's best, if sometimes annoying, governors, Jerry Brown, is replaced by a Republican, George Deukmejian. In Washington, a totally ill-equipped United States Senator, one Sam Hayakawa, is replaced, for better or for worse, by a handsome San Diego politician, Republican Pete Wilson.

From my vantage point, I think Californians in general, and the Gay and Lesbian community in particular, will, after a few months of George Deukmejian, long for the good old days of Jerry Brown. I hope I am wrong, but I fear I will not be. Still, those who know Deukmejian, including a couple of his Gay supporters, tell me that we have nothing to fear from the conservative Republican. That is not to say we should expect the appointment of any more Gay and Lesbian judges for the next four years, but I suppose we could have done worse, and besides, I was never impressed with Tom Bradley's track record anyway. Even Pete Wilson should make the departure of Hayakawa look like a blessing. Hayakawa is headed for political retirement — right where some of the other senatorial has-beens like George Murphy and John Tunney are.

1982 saw the retirement (temporarily, hopefully) of Jerry Brown and Sam Hayakawa; it saw popular Supervisor Jack Molinari become a Democrat (with a bright political future, predictably); it saw a local election in which Gay and Lesbian candidates fared poorly; it saw the only Democrat with a chance of beating Ronald Reagan next year — Ted Kennedy — bow to family pressure and remove himself as a presidential candidate; it saw Democrats in California gain no less than six seats in the House of Representatives, two in the State Senate (while the Republicans gained a lone seat in the Assembly); it saw one of San Francisco's best-known politicians, Milton Marks, take on one of the country's toughest politicians, Phil Burton, and get badly beaten; it saw the passing of one of California's most talented political strategists, Don Bradley; 1982 brought a public-drinking scandal involving District Attorney Arlo Smith and his top aide to the front pages, a scandal that the D.A. would rather forget.

Other moments I remember in 1982 included Quentin Kopp, a bright politician if ever there was one, losing his temper with yours truly at a Republican dinner and yelling at me, calling me "the Herb Caen of the Castro;" Paul Boneberg taking over the reins of the Stonewall Gay Demo Club from one of the wisest politicians I know, Gerry Parker; Supervisor Harry Britt moving his residence from the Castro to the Polk Street area (still can't figure that one out); political gadfly Ray Broshers, a shit-stirrer who did more evil than good, passing on and going to his reserved spot up there (or maybe the other direction)

1982 saw the retirement of liberal Democratic Congressman John Burton, being replaced with Barbara Boxer as the only woman in the Democratic delegation from California; the defeat of long-time State Superintendent of Public Instruction Wilson Riles, bringing a totally new dimension to the state's education post; the election of John Van de Kamp, a liberal, to the office of Attorney General, a supporter of Gay and Lesbian rights. Certainly one of the biggest stories in San Francisco politics in 1982 was the election of Wendy Nelder as president of the Board of Supervisors, replacing Jack Molinari — very significant to Gay rights; the other story we cannot overlook is the mayoral veto of Harry Britt's spousal benefits legislation and the political ramifications that the veto caused Mayor Feinstein as she approaches her 1983 re-election campaign.

New Attorney General John Van de Kamp, who went to Sacramento with Gay backing

As for 1983 — it, hopefully, will be better; in fact, a Gallup poll completed last week says that despite nearly 12 million being unemployed (thanks in large part to Reaganomics), Americans are more optimistic in their outlook for 1983 than at the outset of any of the past five years. The poll showed that 50% of those polled predict that 1983 will be better than 1982, while economists ranging from conservative to liberal are predicting that this will be a year of recovery.

RUNNING RUMORS

Rumors of who is running for what in San Francisco keep coming in, and the latest from the What-is-Quentin-Running-For department is that he is being urged by some of his advisors to take on Arlo Smith, while others are prodding him into another run at Dianne Feinstein; Kopp is reportedly listening to those urging him to run for mayor and one of those supposedly in the know has told me that Quentin is planning a meeting with Los Angeles political strategist Michael Berman regarding the mayoral race.

The Alice Toklas Club will elect a new president next Monday night at 2174 Market Street . . . Some are saying that they are already missing Dick Sklar around City Hall — not the nicest guy around, but probably one of the brightest . . . Arkansas Senator Dale Bumpers the latest of the Southern gentlemen to join the pack of 1984 Democratic presidential hopefuls . . . Look for the political honeymoon between Governor Deukmejian and his successor, Democrat John Van de Kamp, the new Attorney General, to be a short one; meanwhile, it took Leo McCarthy, the new Lt. Governor, only a couple of minutes after the Duke's inaugural speech on Monday to start poking fun at the new Governor while being interviewed on KRON-TV immediately after the inaugural. Both McCarthy and Van de Kamp are expected to be candidates for governor in four years.

Gay leaders in Washington, D.C., still talking about the poor turnout for Harry Britt's highly-touted appearance last month at the Washington Gay Community Center. Despite plenty of advance publicity, and the fact that the event was sponsored by the Democratic Socialists of America and co-sponsored by several Washington area Gay groups, the $5 per person Britt appearance drew, according to the Washington Blade Gay newspaper, "less than 30" people. One of the sponsors told the Bay Area Reporter that he and others were bemused by some of Britt's statements; i.e. "Women don't make very good men; Gays don't make very good straights, and Blacks don't make very good whites." Britt said that he is bothered by the definition that Gays are "just like everybody else except for our sexuality" and said that white Gay men who accept that definition are "reinforcing sexism and racism."

In discussing Mayor Feinstein's veto of his "domestic partnership" bill which came while Britt was in Washington, the Supervisor called the veto a "moral mistake" and told his Washington audience that Feinstein "believes Gays can be perfectly good straight people if we just try hard enough."

Among the better last-minute judicial appointments out-going Governor Brown made (he made a record 52 judicial appointments his final day) was long-time Gay activist attorney Herb Donaldson to the Municipal Court in San Francisco. They don't come any better than Herb

Donaldson, and Brown is to be congratulated. One of the appointments I would have rather not seen, however, is Richard Gravelle, a former member of the state PUC, but then I have no use for those PUC members who jump every time that PG&E barks anyway, and Gravelle was among the worst of them . . . As for Jerry Brown's appointment of his cousin Hal Brown to Barbara Boxer's Marin County supervisorial seat, and the uproar it caused by Marin liberal Democrats, particularly Anne Charles, who, of course, wanted the job for herself and is now crying foul

Playwright-actor-comedian Charles Busch appears tonight (Jan. 6; $5) at Valencia Rose, 8p.m., in a benefit for the Stonewall Gay Demo Club — don't miss this one . . . Anti-Gay former Republican State Senator John Schmitz was being charged with violating the Political Reform Act by failing to report that he received a $9,000 "gift" from his campaign committee (and it couldn't happen to a nicer guy) . . . The East Bay Lesbian/Gay Demo Club will march in next Saturday's (January 15) Martin Luther King March and Rally in Oakland (849-3983 for info) . . . And this one I know you have been waiting for: President and Nancy Reagan will celebrate their 31st wedding anniversary March 4 on board Queen Elizabeth's yacht, The Britannia, in San Francisco's very own Bay . . . Just like us common folk, John Baker, the 22-year old son of White House Chief of Staff James Baker, was arrested and charged with selling marijuana last week in Pearsall, Texas . . . ON THE JOB: GAY PEOPLE AT WORK
Profile: Communicator

ARTHUR LAZERE, C.R.A.

David Rothenberg is an intelligent, articulate, feisty mover and shaker in New York City Gay politics. As is the case with many successful people, he is a multi-talented person who takes on a variety of different activities all at once, activities that tend to reinforce one another. Underlying what he does seems to be the unifying skill of verbal communication — that special ability to find the elusive words which describe a situation or a feeling or an idea in such a way as to generate in his audience a sense of shared understanding. A winner of the Robert Livingston Memorial Award for community service, Rothenberg's history is another interesting story of an individual's development into a leadership position in the Gay movement.

Now 49, Rothenberg grew up in New Jersey. He told me:

"I knew I was Gay since I was three years old; I knew that I had to lie about it since I was three and a half . . . I spent the next thirty-seven years of my life lying to everybody who was important to me. I was a classic closet case. I went steady in high school and I always got by. When I told people when I was forty that I was Gay, they were all surprised because I played sports. I was a good athlete when I was a kid . . . The person who had the greatest impact on me was Jackie Robinson, because I identified with his being an outsider. He was different from everybody else. That was the beginning of my involvement with the civil rights movement — wanting Jackie Robinson to make it. I understood baseball as a teenager and I translated that when I went to college to the political arena."

Rothenberg went to the University of Denver where he studied social sciences, edited the college newspaper, and became active in student government. He served in the Army for the obligatory two years and then went to New York where he worked as a Broadway press agent, working on about one hundred shows over a twelve-year period. During this time, too, he became active in the Black civil rights movement and the anti-Vietnam War movement.

In 1967 Rothenberg produced a play off-Broadway, a prison drama written by an ex-offender titled Fortune and Men's Eyes. In preparing the play, Rothenberg went into jails and prisons to observe and became concerned with the rights and needs of ex-offenders. He began a series of on-stage discussions following performances of the play. The discussions evolved into a forum for ex-convicts subsequently named The Fortune Society, from the play's title.

Initially, Fortune Society meetings were held at Rothenberg's Broadway theatre office. As the organization grew from a speaking society to a service and advocacy program, it found its own office space and developed into its current size — $800,000 per year budget, staff of thirty, counseling, job placement, berg to be on their first Board of Directors. This finally precipitated a decision to "come out." Always a child of the media, David Rothenberg came out on the David Susskind Show, a nationally syndicated television program. For six years, since the inception of The Fortune Society, he had been closeted to his staff and members of the Society. Simultaneous with his appearance on the Susskind show, he submitted his resignation to the Society.

The two ex-offenders who were key to the organization vocational and educational programs. Nearly three thousand ex-offenders participate in the program each year.

Rothenberg's responsibilities as Director of the society grew along with the organization to the point where he gave up his theatre work to devote full time to his new venture.

In 1973 the National Gay Task Force invited Rothen-

berg to be on their first Board of Directors. This finally precipitated a decision to "come out." Always a child of the media, David Rothenberg came out on the David Susskind Show, a nationally syndicated television program. For six years, since the inception of The Fortune Society, he had been closeted to his staff and members of the Society. Simultaneous with his appearance on the Susskind show, he submitted his resignation to the Society.

The two ex-offenders who were key to the organization refused his resignation and made it clear to David that they were insulted. "Why," they asked, "would he not allow them the same opportunity to stand up for his rights as he had stood for theirs?" Rothenberg: "So self-hating was I of my homosexuality, so negative had been my experience, that it never occurred to me that people who loved me would still love me and learn about what Gay is and become pro-Gay because of their love for me . . . My Gayness was my gift to this job. It gave me an ability to identify and care about other alienated people."

Rothenberg knows everyone in New York who is active in Gay rights, attends every major event of interest to the community, and is extraordinarily well informed on the ins and outs of New York politics. His analytic skill is no less impressive than his encyclopedic knowledge and observation of the events of the day. To be sure he has enough to do to keep himself busy, Rothenberg also does interview shows for WBAL, a listener supported radio station

In 1979 Mayor Ed Koch appointed Rothenberg to a vacancy on the New York City Human Rights Commission. It seems somewhat ironic to have an upfront Gay man on the Human Rights Commission in a city that has no Gay rights law. And not much action has come directly with his action on Gay issues through the commission. But Rothenberg is savvy enough to use his visibility to good purpose. He has been able to raise sensitivities at the commission to Gay issues and problems. In the recent police raids on Blue's, a Times Square area Black Gay bar, Rothenberg used his commission seat to instigate an investigation of this already infamous incident.

One comes away from interviewing Rothenberg with admiration for his sincerity, his caring about people, particularly the most downtrodden in our society. But, even more, I was impressed with his skill with words, with unpremeditated turns of phrase that capture subtleties of feeling and thought. It comes out in conversation and it is evident in his writing. Our most charismatic leaders are often those who can articulate for us those elusive feelings and thoughts which we cannot express for ourselves. I suspect that Rothenberg the communicator has just begun to be heard.

Living and Laughing

fttimes in the course of selecting persons to be interviewed, it is those in the limelight who come to mind first. However, in the interest of fair play, as it were, attention must be given to those who prefer not to be in the forefront, but remain an integral part of the background, if you will, to carry on their day-to-day activities while holding steadfast and true to their chosen life style of being gay.

One such individual is Dean Felciano, an erudite, educated, insightful, savant, and enlightened soul who resides in Pinole... yes, Pinole! I was respectful of his veracity when he chose not to answer or speak about certain subjects. His decision was made not on the grounds of being afraid of stepping on toes, but rather on the understanding that since he chose not to be involved in certain aspects of "gay life" he felt he had no viable comments to add to an already "confusing situation."

"I'm happy to admit that I am 42 years old," he said to me. "It certainly beats the alternative, don't you agree? I've lived in the Bay Area for 39 of those years. I find this area to be extremely stimulating and challenging for anyone who appreciates the diverse activities available to everyone."

"I realized that I was Gay as a young teenager, but I felt no reason then or now to wear it on my sleeve. I feel that I am respected for who I am and what I have done rather than what I am. I think that the Gay Parade is a very healthy activity and I would genuinely like to participate in it but I have always had to work on the day of the Parade. I certainly can't say that I try to hide my gayness... after all, I do belong to the Temescal

Gay Men's Chorus and sing in public.

Nez: Well then, if, as you say, you don't wear a tag on your sleeve that you are Gay, why do you want to march... and why do you sing in public?

Dean: Why not? Hee hee, chortle, laugh, hee hee!

Dean Felciano

Nez: Dear God... your laugh would deafen a hard rock performer! I assume that there isn't much Gay activity in Pinole. Is the town aware of your life style?

Dean: Chortle, hee hee... I'm sure that my neighbors know. After all, where I live, the bedroom walls are very thin! But the subject has never been broached.

Nez: Do you think there is a Gay Community?

Dean: I think there is a tremendous Gay Community. It is very diversified, touching all aspects of living conditions. I don't see it as a cohesive entity, but tastes are similar enough that there is a line of communication. The mere fact that a person is Gay or Lesbian puts that person within the context of the Gay Community. But I don't see any one person or group as being representative of every single one of us who just happens to be homosexual. That can never happen... just as no one person or group can truly and honestly represent every single heterosexual. Gays are just too polymorphic to be classified as one entity, don't you agree?

Nez: Hey! I'm supposed to ask the questions! you'll get your chance later! Dean, I've never seen you down. You are always happy and eager to enjoy. What is it that you enjoy most in your life?

Dean: Hee hee, snicker, giggle... I really enjoy living! I love to learn new things and love to be with people. People are a constant reservoir of enjoyment, and it's difficult for me not to get along with people. But when I am personally attacked, I most certainly attack back if its urgent. But that doesn't happen very often. I find it rare that people actually sit down and plan to do you damage. As you know, I enjoy a quick with and mind. I love the challenge of one's mind, and the learning that comes from that challenge.

Nez: What are your views of the overall Gay Scene in Oakland?

Dean: I don't think there is a cohesive scene in Oakland. At times there is too much going on and at other times there isn't enough going on. I would like to see the "Gay Scene" meshed in with the straight society... with non-disputed outlooks for all. I know that is a very Utopian outlook — but after all, there is only one world. But then again, that meshing is a problem with every minority. I feel.

Nez: Any advice to someone just coming out of the closet?

Dean: All I can say is for them to enjoy themselves... hee hee, titter, chuckle, cackle... It seems we spend too much time worrying about what we are. So much time is spent in that worry that we don't know who we are, where we are, and what we are doing!

Nez: Where would you like the Gay Movement to go?

Dean: From fourth-class citizens to first-class citizens, through exploration of political and cultural and social situations.

Nez: What do you mean by fourth-class?

Dean: It seems that we are always represented as a negative entity by the media. Only recently has it become more positive because of "influential" people coming out, and I think that whatever social structure one is in, everyone has to recognize that we are all an integral and viable part of all social structures.

Nez: Who is Dean?

Dean: Ohhhhhhhgggggggg giggle, snigger, crow, cough, cackle, burst, hee hee, split, roar ohhhhhgggggggggggggg!!

(Nez' Note: at that point of Dean's outburst, both the ma- tronly waitresses, the cook, the owner, and a lone customer at the counter decided it was time to change their collective underwear!)

I am in love with Dean! I like myself. Dean is sincere, generous, and an enjoyable

Founder Visits Hayward MCC

The Rev. Troy D. Perry, founder of the Universal Fellowship of Metropolitan Community Churches, will visit Hayward MCC the weekend of January 14, 15 and 16.

Perry started to preach at the age of thirteen and was licensed as a Baptist minister at fifteen. It was in California, in 1962, that Reverend Perry came to terms with being Gay. "I had been taught by my previous Church that you couldn't be a Christian and a Gay person, too," said Perry. "I kept this up until one day God got a word in edgewise and said, 'Don't tell ME what I can do. I love you, Troy, and I don't have any stepsons or stepdaughters. Reread My Word!' And reread God's Word I did!"

Details concerning times, places, and activities surrounding Rev. Perry's visit will appear in the January 13 B.A.R.

CUAV End of Year Items

RANDY SCHELL & DIANA ZABARTE-CHRISTENSEN

For some the holidays have meant an even bigger party, presents, and a ton of food. For others it's been summarizing the last year's events and making resolutions for the new year. Volunteers and staff at CUAV have done their share of celebrating all while continuing to make this agency run. There's the whistle campaign to complete, the new brochure to pick up from the printer, the year-end thank you letters to send to generous contributors and the never ending casework arising from reported assaults to CUAV's "Uni-Safe" hotline.

CUAV will continue in 1983 to provide services to victims of violence. The agency's staff and volunteers will continue to work on better organized strategies to prevent violence. It's a major accomplishment for the Gay community that CUAV survived the growing pains of its first year funded and that it continues to maintain services by and for the Gay/Lesbian community.

Fagbashers, rapists, and thieves take no holiday from their deeds and afford no peace to their victims. Remember, if you witness or are the victim of an assault, we want to hear about it. Report it to CUAV at "Uni-Safe" (864-7233). If you're interested in volunteering on any of our projects (whistle campaigns, public speaking, street watch patrols, office work, etc.) call us or come by our new office at 514 Castro St.

8th near Mission. A 29-year old woman was walking up 8th Street toward Market from a women's bar, Clementina's. Suddenly she was approached by a male who demanded her money. He then threw her against a brick wall, scraping her face. The victim turned quickly and kicked the suspect in the shin and managed to get away. She managed to find a cab a few blocks away and then reported the incident to the police.

Noe/18th & 19th. A 35-year old male was walking on Noe toward his car. As he reached his car, he was hit from behind and knocked to the ground. He looked up to see that there were three persons in the group. One of the attackers took his wallet. The victim was then struck with a metal bar and then blacked out. He was taken to General Hospital and treated.

Masonic/Divisadero. The

yelling, "Kill faggots." When the train reached the Muni Station at Van Ness, he got up to disembark the train and was suddenly attacked by two of the youths. He was hit in the face and dragged in the car. The assailants left the car. The victim decided not to get off at Van Ness and instead continued to the Powell station. He filed a report with Muni officials who, in return, called the police and filed a police incident report. He was then transported to Central Emergency and treated for his wounds.

Haight/Pierce. This victim was walking on Haight Street at Pierce. He noticed ten persons in their early teens attack a male in his early 20's. This observer witnessed the group knocking the victim to the street and hitting him repeatedly with belts, feet, hands, etc. Enraged, the observer ran into the crowd and created a commotion. The crowd began to quickly disperse. The first victim was then in the position to get up and flee. However, some of the group that still remained on the spot of the assault attacked the observer. The observer quickly got himself out of this situation and began to run after the original victim to see if he could assist him. Members of the crowd began yelling, "Run — you punk fags."

Church/25th. Both of these survivors were walking on Church Street and observed a male and female standing on the street. The male was wielding a knife. As he noticed the two men, the knife-wielder screamed, "Hey, fags — queers..." Both of the men ignored the insults which appeared to enrage the assailant. He put his knife in its sheath and jumped into the middle of both men and began assaulting them wildly. The first victim was bitten on the neck and leg, and the second was treated for bruises on his feet. They managed to get away. They are still being treated for wounds and will be filing with Victim Witness Assistance in order that bills resulting from this attack will be reimbursed by the State of California.

FINAL NOTE
Remember, if you are a victim of an assault, you may qualify for Victim/Witness compensation. If you are treated for injuries, if you have missed work because of an assault and insurance will not cover the costs, the State will reimburse you for those bills. Call CUAV for further details or Victim Witness Assistance at 552-6550.

QUICK HITS

Divisadero/Hayes. The victim was on the 24 Divisadero bus. Three assailants began ridiculing him: "Is your friend your boyfriend?" etc. The victim got off at Hayes Street. Two of the assailants got off and stepped in front of him and one of the assailants began striking him in the face. The third assailant grabbed his wallet and then all of them fled. The victim of this altercation ran to a small store at Divisadero and Fell Streets and called the police. As he hung up the telephone he saw the person who had grabbed his wallet. The police responded immediately and the victim pointed out the assailant and he was apprehended. The other two assailants were not caught.

survivor of this incident was near Kaiser Hospital walking at about 1:30 a.m. A group of at least 70 juveniles were walking toward him. As they reached each other, several members of this large group grabbed him and dragged him into the bushes. They knocked him down and began hitting and kicking him in the side, head and legs. During this altercation he was called a "faggot." His wallet was taken and he was left there. He managed to get himself home and treated a cut above his eye and bruises elsewhere on his body.

Van Ness/Market. This 28-year old male was catching the K Ingleside at the Muni Station at Market and Castro Streets. Inside of the car, 8-10 youths were

SAN JOSE: FROM THE ROSEGARDEN

Politics and Herpes

TOM ROGERS

New Year's Eve was a wonderful spin. Parties everywhere, complete with balloons, streamers, noise-makers and a flood of champagne.

I got my midnight kiss at the Watergarden Party where I was on a panel of judges to select their New Year's "baby." Lust was our guide, camp our vehicle, and what a tour! Neal Bean, AKA Ida Know, performed his annual function as emcee with a flair he doesn't normally display. His drag would've made Lily Tomlin AKA Ernestine drool, and the questions he posed for each of the twelve contestants to answer were delicious. There were two categories of questions — situation and etiquette — to ferret out the attitudes of the contestants. A couple of examples: "Situation: After finally landing the catch of the day you discover that this beautiful, well-built and manly hunk has B.O. Do you: A) cry 'Gag me with a spoon' and leave. B) eat pit. or C) pass out?"

"Etiquette: You have just sucked off a fantastic hunk! However, you discover that his liquid present has a bitter, bitter taste. Do you: A) politely hold it, humming 'Excuse me' and run for the nearest can. B) immediately spit it out, or C) swallow it and beg for more!" The winner, Michael Smith, won an executive membership to the Watergarden (free entry to the Watergarden for a year, among other privileges) valued at $500 and there were also prizes for Rick Dilly, 2nd place winner, and Jason Keith, 3rd place winner.

David Price and Mark Dalton of "A Culinary Experience" did a great job of catering the party. Champagne fountain, their beautiful hors d'oeuvres and service.

Big Michael (right) puts on his most winning smile while trying to convince Jack Britton and the rest of the world that "it isn't true."

An early-evening birthday party for Donny Thorndyke was thrown at Main Street just before their New Year's Eve party got underway. The affable owner of the cafe concession at Main Street was presented a heart-shaped cake trimmed wistfully with cherries.

New Year's Day was highlighted by a birthday party at Toyon for Empress Darlene. She arrived in a huge Cadillac limo, looking radiant in spite of her evening at the Watergarden. (Being pretty, for her, is easy.)

The latest Stockton Strip rampant rumor is simply not true, says Big Michael. The rumor linked Big Michael and Marlene (by proxy) romantically. It all started when Jerry O'Keefe of the 641 Club saw a playful little dry-humping scene between Big Michael and Jerry's sister Marlene's hubby Bob. Anyway, it was just another one of those complicated, "definitely not true" rumors that tend to rage up and down the strip.

very long, so if it is there, feel free to remove it.

Word has it that a chicken descended on the Savoy to perform a strip. After the fluffy feathers came off, a second layer of harder stuff — namely chains, a whip, and levis — was revealed. Sue says that the sight of the whip sent Pat right to high "C" and did a good job of wrecking the rest of the crowd as well. Note to the stripper: check out "Brown's Hotel" on Folsom. Word has it that those gals (Brown's is under new management) would love your act.

The First Annual Picket Party was held last week at Big Mama's in Hayward. They're still fighting off the AFL-CIO. The union posted a couple of almost waif-like picketers outside the door for the occasion.

Ran into David Steward, former Santa Clara County Human Rights Commissioner who was this area's only out-front Gay public official. He dropped out of politics, which helps explain why we haven't heard much from him for a while. He now lives in San Francisco and is beginning to mix and mingle in politics again. Says he recently explained his re-involvement in politics to Harry Britt by admitting that "Politics is just like Herpes. Once it's in your blood there's no getting rid of it." Steward says Britt disagreed, though. "They'll find a cure for Herpes one of these days," said Britt.

The BDL&G Community Center Board of Directors filled four vacant Board positions and selected a new director during a six-hour marathon session last week.

Board-member confirmations were unanimously voted for Jamele Dalton and Mike Torrain, and Juanita Bloch and Donna Henderson were elected to fill the other two positions. Juanita Bloch returns to the Center after having served as its first Treasurer. Donna Henderson just completed a six-month term as the Center's Director.

The Board's packaged agenda included a decision to transfer the Center's savings account to Atlas Savings and Loan, a review of some prospective new sites for the Center, a decision to require annual budget submittals from coordinators of the Center's growing list of programs, a decision to plan a special out-of-town goal-setting session of the full board, the selection of a committee to plan a full week of activities (to be called Gay Pride Week) to coincide with the annual San Jose Gay Freedom Day Rally, and the selection of a new Director to fill the new six-month term that began January 1.

An hour-long discussion of the candidate resulted in the appointment of Frank O'Reilly, current co-chair of

Frank O'Reilly, new Center Director, the SCVCHR and long-time Center supporter.

Found more of the New Year spirit than I'd expected to find. Hope, peace and happiness. Love is so wonderful. Go hug your pet and have a great week.

B.A.R. INTERVIEW

For the Sake of a Friend, For the Sake of a Play

by John F. Karr

Although Arthur Laurents' play, The Enclave (opening tonight at Theatre Rhinoceros), is not a musical, it isn't surprising to find that Stephen Sondheim has contributed incidental music for it. Sondheim and Laurents are old friends, having worked together on West Side Story and Gypsy. But a more amazing tie becomes evident with knowledge of the play. The Enclave is a nonmusical version of what the George Furth/Sondheim groundbreaker Company could — or should — have been.

Company preceded The Enclave by two years. Both are about a single man, his growing self-knowledge, and his relationships with a group of married friends. In Company the man is straight, which many people (particularly Gays) thought unbelievable. In The Enclave he is Gay. Whatever seemed homogenized, made safe for Broadway audiences in Company is treated adultly and without flinching in The Enclave. How much more believable it seems, how much truer to the situation presented in Company. No wonder Sondheim admired it enough to take the time to write music for it.

Sondheim's contribution is minimal, though, amounting to less than ten minutes of background music for scene changes. Credit for the contemporary pith of the play must go to author Laurents. Although he hasn't been publicly identified as Gay, Laurents writes of the bachelor's dilemma and experience with verisimilitude. Rhino director Robert Pitman chalks that up to Laurents' expertise. The author of Home of the Brave, The Snake Pit, Anastasia, and The Way We Were as well as two of Broadway's most gritty musicals "doesn't write words that people don't say," claims Pitman. "He's a consummate craftsman."

He missed the special attention he received as a New York theatre professional.

Pitman's knowledge of The Enclave might amount to that of a craftsman as well. In 1973 he worked as Production Stage Manager for both of the plays' initial productions. As far as he knows, this Rhino production is the first revival since then, and it incorporates changes made by Laurents plus material originally cut when it proved unsuited to the actors.

Pitman, who began his career as a director, returns to that position with this production. He's worked with Theatre Rhino since the opening of their new theatre, having come to Rhino because of his New York friendship with Rhino stalwarts J. Kevin Hanlon and Martin Xero. "J. Kevin and I were off-Broadway fairies together," he relates nonchalantly. It was only logical that Pitman look them up when he arrived in San Francisco three years ago after leaving "show business."

"Although I started out as a director," he says, "I found I could make a living as a Stage Manager. One day I woke up and realized I'd been a stage manager for ten years! I was not prepared to spend the time paying dues to become a director, so I looked over my options, left the business, and moved to San Francisco."

Laurents is saying that homophobia exists in all levels of society. The upper though, and credits the support of his lover while he went through "some adjustments" with ultimately helping him receive personal gratification from his present career within social work. He especially enjoys the contact with people his work brings him, similar to the intense relationships one experiences in theatre. "I drove a taxi for a year in New York City," he jokes, "so I'm fearless!"

Pitman brought The Enclave script to Rhino. "They are very open to people coming in to work, help, or offer ideas," he says. The script echoes his feeling for relationships and friends. "The play is about friendship and the things one does in the name, and for the sake, of friendship."

An enclave is a unit that functions undisturbed within foreign territory. The Enclave details the plans of coming out of the closet Ben and his best friends, three heterosexual couples, to form an enclave of houses against the hostile world of New York City. Although they are sophisticated, educated, urban people, they cannot accept the introduction of Ben's male lover as a member of their family.

Laurents is saying that homophobia exists in all levels of society. The upper class can accept Gays (and Blacks, and Jews) academically, but not in practicality."

The original production was not a success. "The very people who were being exposed by the play's statement were the people reviewing it," Pitman relates. "Only Martin Gottfried picked up on this point, that all elements of society can be homophobic." Even the educated, the "enlightened."

"The straight men cast as the lovers were uncomfortable with the physicality depicted, so it was deleted. The production was very WASP, contained. In our production all the characters express more physicality."

"The original concentrated on wit and lost the loving. I think our production is less arch. The actors interact more fully and understand the lives and nuances of their characters. This is the best cast I've seen at Theatre Rhino," says Pitman, and although every director is immodest about his cast, one feels in Pitman's experience a greater objectivity and truth.

"Finally, though," he concludes, "the critics just weren't ready in 1973 to accept the point about homophobia."

"The sensibility of the play is clearly homosexual. Ben is faced with the choice of his enclave, or his younger lover, who represents a liberated and integrated lifestyle. The confrontations with each member of the enclave are intensely dramatic and not always flattering to straight people. But I think the play has a positive ending. It's hard for some, but I think they'll come around."

Pitman is as excited about the set as about the script and his cast. In a novel move, the Rhino stage has been both widened and deepened, going all the way to the actual back wall of the theatre. "We even have action occurring in the alley outside the theatre," Pitman exults.

Most important, though, is the play itself. It's unusual among Rhino's repertory for its commercial, mainstream origins. Sensing the challenge, Pitman reveals most a desire to serve, and reveal, a play he's lived with for a decade. "As a stage manager all those years I watched talented people put shows together. For me, it's about the process. Not career advancement, or personal ego, but in the play. At Rhino I feel like we can do it for its own sake. It's absolutely worth doing for its own sake."

Gay WHO Gay WHAT Gay WHERE Gay WHEN Gay WHY

One Into Many

San Franciscans barely got a nibble at Charles Busch when he played a one night stand at Studio Rhino last September. But Busch liked the taste of the city he got, and has returned for a month long engagement at the Valencia Rose. The solo performer from New York previews his show with benefits for The Stonewall Gay Democratic Club on Thursday, January 6, and for the KS Foundation on Friday 7, with an official opening on Saturday 8. He'll play Thursday through Saturday at 8 PM through-out January.

The young actor (he admits to being "somewhere around" 26) calls his production Charles Busch Alone... With a Cast of Thousands. Although in actuality there are approximately two dozen characters, the versatility Busch displays in playing them all is impressive. And besides, he said, "I liked the way 'with a Cast of Thousands' sounded!"

His show consists of two plays he's written. "Escape From Camp Kitchiwamee," which details the disgust of three summer camp misfits, and "After You've Gone," a serious film noir styled murder mystery.

Me and Miss Jackson

Edward Guthman is well known under several identities. As a journalist his work has appeared in several Gay papers and on a regular basis as a film reviewer for The Bay Guardian. As a screen-writer he is credited with co-authoring the film Whatever Happened to Susan Jane. He appeared in that movie as Kevin Whiteside, the snooty TV reporter. He's been the Big Bad Wolf on the shopping mall circuit and an Englishman in Oliver! with Georgia Brown. He provided the voice of the hero in Arthur J. Bressan's porno-valentine, Passing Strangers. But his most unusual identity is his newest, the aging woman he portrays in Miss Jackson Converses: The Burning Issues of Our Times.

Guthman will perform Miss Jackson Converses, which he wrote in traditional monologue fashion, as the opener for comedienne Carol Roberts. Their show inaugurates a series of Late Night

Edward Guthman

Charles Busch as himself

The Advocate called him "the nation's most accomplished Gay monologist." But Busch sees his vehicles more as plays than monologues.

"My work is all storytelling, complete stories," he told the B.A.R. "I've written one-act plays in which I play all the parts. I used to use costumes, props, hats and wigs and boas, but I found they were actually distracting. I'm a kind of minimalist performer. Although I adore spectacle, by and large I've found for a solo performer, simple is best. So I supply the clues and the audience supplies the rest.

"I've always played as many men as women, but it's difficult for audiences to get past drag elements. People take me more seriously now without the costumes. And I guess my powers of suggestion are good. I have one character I've always thought of as blonde, although I don't say what color her hair is. Reviewers always call her 'The Blonde Bombshell!'"

"After You've Gone" is a more advanced piece than my earlier ones in which the characters were types. I'm getting away from that, into my own creations.

"I started writing monologues when I got frustrated working on a collective basis with a theatre group. I was familiar with the work of Ruth Draper, and everyone knows Lily Tomlin's work. I had a sense of what a miraculous thing suggesting whole worlds by yourself could be. Although designed for one person, I like to give the illusion these are regular plays. So it's not a stand-up routine, but a theatrical evening." ■

To reserve tickets for the Stonewall Benefit on 1/6, call 626-1245. For the KS Benefit on 1/7 and all other performances, call 552-1445. Tickets are $5. Dinners are available before all shows.

Actors Classes

Theatre Rhinoceros will begin a six-week acting course concentrating on script work — monologues, partnered scenes and memory techniques — beginning January 15. The class, taught by J. Kevin Hanlon, will meet each Saturday from 11 AM to 2 PM through February 20, and will require at least one hour of outside work each week. The course fee is $75, with a 20% discount for TR members and subscribers. Enrollment by January 14 by calling 552-4100. ■

No Penetration

"Adam Ant Penetrates At All Levels!" scream the full page ads in music mags for Ant's new album. But he sure hasn't penetrated on the San Francisco level.

Go away, Adam Antly.

Three weeks ago he canceled a sold-out gig at the Stone the day of the show. Ant, a butchly lower-class English rocker, stated he did not want to play for Gays. His manager hastily explained what Ant really meant, that he did not want to play small clubs. The real reason for the cancellation is not yet known. Ant's new album, not exactly topping the charts, is titled Friend or Foe and the ads for it beg, "Which side are you on?" Foolish question. It's obvious which side Ant is on. ■

TALES OF TESSI TURA

Sleight of Hand

GEORGE HEYMONT

It's no secret — we live in the era of the stage director. Though many don't sing (some can't even read music), directors have taken as firm a grip on the production process as the conductor and composer. The 1982 Central Opera Service conference was devoted to the theme of young operatic stage directors. This summer the Merola Program gave out awards to apprentice stage directors. Opera queens casually refer to the "Ponnelle" Dutchman or the "Chereau" Ring. What happened to Wagner in the process?

This summer witnessed two exquisite productions which bore the unerring mark of directorial genius. In neither case was the director billing himself out as the superstar of the production. Both men worked cleanly, with incisive strokes and an innate sensitivity to what was happening in the music. The results were a joy to behold and the best work seen in 1982.

LIZ TAYLOR NEVER SOUNDED LIKE THIS

With Charles MacKerras on the podium and John Copley directing, there was little that could go wrong with San Francisco Opera's production of Julius Caesar (which opened the recent summer festival). Handel's opera goes on forever, yet Copley directed with a grace and simplicity which worked wonders.

This version (borrowed from the English National Opera) was a vast improvement over the Rudel/Capobianco effort which held forth at City Opera for so many years. ENO's production had more money at hand and used it well, creating lush costumes and imaginative sets to bring Handel's music to life. The sound was quite different than the NYCO production, with Caesar cast as a mezzo and the roles of Ptolemy and Mirenus sung by counter-tenors. As Ptolemy, James Bowman was simply fantastic — knocking out huge passages of fioritura while turning the character into an arch-villain. A job well done.

The strongest singing came (surprisingly) not from Caesar or Cleopatra, but from that veteran singer Sarah Walker in the role of Cornelia. Walker practically wiped up the floor with the rest of the cast — her musicianship one of the highlights of the evening. Tatiana Troyanos looked fine, but sounded a bit lame as Caesar (often having trouble projecting and singing with rather mushy diction).

As Cleopatra, Valerie Masterson erased the debacle of her San Francisco debut last year in La Traviata. Her Egyptian princess was a superbly instinctive and sensual characterization (undetermined occasionally by vocal difficulties in some of the more demanding passages). Cleopatra is one of those roles which demands a soprano of vocal and physical beauty who can do justice to the role. While Masterson acquitted herself most honorably, I find it hard to understand why no one has ever cast Faye Robinson in the role (a superb singer who would look as well as sound like the perfect Cleopatra).

"All right, all right. THEN what did he do?" Fiordiligi (Ashley Putnam) asks her sister Dorabella (Patricia McCaffrey) for vital statistics as the two sisters compare boyfriends in Mozart's COSI FAN TUTTE.

THE STRIP

BRING ON THE BOYS

Down by the shores of the Mississippi the Opera Theatre of St. Louis mounted a new production of Così Fan Tutte which drew unanimous raves from critics around the nation, and deservedly so. Lovingly conducted by the late Calvin Simmons with a superb unit set by John Conklin, the production combined a new translation by Andrew Porter with the directorial talents of Dr. Jonathan Miller. Even when seen on a night when most of the cast was suffering from allergies and colds, this Così was one of those all-time great nights for Mozart's opera.

Thankfully, Richard Gaddes cast his production with superb taste, pairing Jerry Hadley (a superb tenor) with Thomas Hampson as Ferrando and Guglielmo. Ashley Putnam and a near lookalike, Patricia McCaffrey, were the two sisters with Ruth Golden offering a rather campy Despina. Hadley and Putnam were in rare form, singing like angels and coloring Mozart's music with rare passion. Putnam's Fiordiligi, in particular, was a knockout.

One of the joys of seeing Mozart in the Loretto-Hilton Theatre is the auditorium's intimacy. A 900-seat house with a thrust stage, this theatre propels the opera into an audience's lap — perfect for Mozart's chamber operas. Little personal touches are not lost as they would be in the immense reaches of a 3,000 seat barn. Miller used the opportunity to include precious moments — such as the instant when one of the men goosed Fiordiligi a split second before a suddenly inspired arpeggio.

Miller and Simmons working together was the great partnership that could have been. Since Calvin's untimely death, Miller has bowed out of directing opera (they were to have done Don Giovanni together next summer). For the opera world it was one of those brief shining moments, like Camelot. At year's end one looks back with a bittersweet memory on this Così and a fond tenderness for San Francisco's Julius Caesar. The two productions rank as the outstanding highlights of the calendar year, setting stern standards for others to match. ■

Ernesto

The Importance of Seeing 'Ernesto'

Ernesto made me happy, sad, angry and horny, sometimes all at once. That's a lot to ask of a movie.

While many countries produce political films, only Italian filmmakers seem able to integrally blend politics with sex, drama, comedy, and especially sex.

It's 1911. Ernesto (Martin Halm) is 16, slender, attractive, half-Jewish. His family is bourgeois. He delights in calling himself a socialist to upset the uncle he and his mother (Virna Lisi) live with, but he's too selfish to be convincing. (His aunt says accurately that he has "a socialist tongue with a capitalist stomach.")

He is drawn into a sexual relationship with one of the laborers (Michele Placido) he supervises at work. They play by the ancient rule: "Boys are bottoms, men are tops," until Ernesto, exploring his newfound power, insists on reversing the roles. (He also tries a female prostitute.) The man loves him too much to deny him anything.

The boy breaks off the relationship and later tells his mother about it in a scene which shows just how cruel and manipulative he can be.

There was no such thing as being "out" in those days. A man lived a "normal" life and if it was discovered that he was Gay he could choose between suicide and prison.

Near the end Ernesto appears headed into the traps society has laid for him, but he's aware of what's happening. In a touching scene that makes us forgive him all that has gone before, he releases a

We see mostly heads and hands, but the sex scenes are highly erotic despite, or because of the fact that the clandestine situation makes them come quickly and quietly. S.W.

pet bird: "Fly while you still can."

A homophobic synopsis from distributor Promovision International, which might have been written in 1911, says that Ernesto was going through a phase, but "that chapter of his life has been closed." I doubt that you'll see it that way. The ending is sad and slightly ambiguous, but offers delicious possibilities.

The screenplay, by a trio including director Salvatore Samperi, cleverly weaves scenes together by repeating a word or idea from one to the next: i.e., Ernesto and his lover are discussing the pain of being fucked for the first time; in the next scene the boss, in a different context, tells Ernesto, "Naturally it hurts."

There's an air of fantasy in the self-conscious settings. The laborers work in clean dirt and Ernesto walks through the warehouse without getting a speck of dust on his three-piece black suit. This works well enough in the period setting, as long as we don't forget that we should learn from history.

Because Samperi had more courage than the people who bought his film for American release, I can endorse Ernesto as a complex, fascinating study of one boy's rite of passage. ■

Nicholas Nickleby

Addicting Dickens

A Special Report on the Television Event by Michael Lasky

When the Royal Shakespeare Company presented its eight-plus hour production of Charles Dickens' 900-page novel Nicholas Nickleby on Broadway last year, it cost a flat $100 a ticket and the limited engagement was quickly sold out. Fortunately for us, a performance of it was taped and the result is truly splendid video theatre.

Even though the play will be shown on television, we are never allowed to forget that this is, above all, theatre. The camera peeks at back stage chicanery and flashes at audience reaction at just the necessary moments.

Most dramatizations of Dickens excessively plotty and chatty novels are usually boiled down to two hours or less, cutting out the very innards of his style. This offering drops virtually nothing and employs 39 actors in 150 different roles. Only the formidable Roger Rees as Nicholas has a solo part and he is on stage most of the time.

The story? It's basic Dickens: a heroic young man, with his virtuous younger sister, to protect, experiences grievous wrongs and observes nefarious and dastardly deeds yet somehow proves that good triumphs eventually over bad.

A useful invention here allows the players to leave their characters to relate Dickens' own comments about their characters thoughts and deeds. It's a technique that breathes living novel, providing the proceedings with a fluidity that otherwise would be overcome in a quagmire of detail.

Once you get past the first hour you'll be hooked. It cast a magical spell that has you cheering and swearing along with Nickleby's fortunes and severe setbacks. In Part Two look for the hilarious bowdlerized Romeo and Juliet and in Part Three watch the opera buffo. In each there is an equal share of humor and pathos.

The original book was published as a 65-part serial. Presented on TV in four teasing portions, NN has much the same headlong appeal. Viewing it, you will have immediately saved $100 but more importantly witnessed a rare theatrical adventure. Bravo! ■

Michael Lasky

Nicholas Nickleby will be telecast on Channel 5, KPPIX, Monday, January 10 through Thursday 13 from 8 to 10 PM except for the last installment which runs from 8 to 11. There is only one commercial break in each installment.

The loathsome, sadistic school master Wackford Squeers (Alun Armstrong) chortles to think he has Nicholas Nickleby (Roger Rees) where he wants him, but he's in for a surprise, in the TV adaptation of the Dickens classic.

Gandhi

...is Dandy

When Richard Attenborough was asked why he doggedly spent 20 years of his life to bring Gandhi to the screen, he replied simply, "Gandhi showed us a way to stop killing each other."

Perhaps that is why Attenborough reveals only the good side of the famous Indian leader's life. He wants us to see only the humane spirit of a man whose name is synonymous with the power of nonviolent protest which won his country its freedom.

Gandhi is portrayed with such startling credibility and realization by Ben Kingsley, an English (half-Indian) stage actor, that at times you begin to think that Mahatma Gandhi himself has been reincarnated.

We first see Mohandas K. Gandhi, an Indian attorney, as he arrives in South Africa where he is made brutally aware of the color prejudice and lack of civil rights of his compatriots. Still only in his early twenties, he resolves to change both attitudes and laws — and do so without resorting to violence.

Although the film is over three hours long (with a 20 minute intermission) it doesn't feel that way for Attenborough has established a flow of ideas sparked from singularly dramatic and crucial events in Gandhi's life. Thus, we become enthralled by Gandhi's transformation from a passionate, vain, and inarticulate lawyer into one of the world's great spokesmen for peace and moral courage.

There are no subtleties in Attenborough's style. Whatever Gandhi does is right, whatever the seemingly barbaric British do is inhumane and ruthless. Alas, such is the way of the benign propagandist for it allows him to whittle down voluminous material into a feasible drama.

With its cast of thousands (some scenes have 300,000 extras), breathtaking photography and mesmerizing Ravi Shankar score, Gandhi is inspiring, enlightening, and amazingly enough — entertaining as the life and above all spirit of the greatest 20th century humanitarian unfolds. ■

BOOK RACK

Fire Island Out, Bluefish Cove In

Pines '79, by Terry Miller; $5.95
Last Summer at Bluefish Cove, by Jane Chambers; $6.95. Available from JH Press, box 294, Village Station, New York, New York, 10014.

by Frank Howell

Gays are odd creatures. Like all minority groups they protest stereotyped treatment and then act out the same things they protest.

Pines '79 is a case in point. Miller has billed his two act play as a romantic comedy. Well and good. But why must these views of Gays disporting themselves so frequently take place on Fire Island? The characters are usually clones on the make who love to disco until dawn without a care in the world. They are always attractive and frequently devoid of brains.

Brace has invited Jeff, a younger man from New York City (where else?) to summer with him and his friends in their roomy place on the island.

Hank and Curt are older lovers who fight frequently while various other friends drift in and out of the trendy scene. People are frequently meeting and breaking up.

Brenda, sixty-seven years young, is a worldly gal who appears to be bisexual and who frequently comments on her past escapades and the current mores of the group.

This is all cute and coy stuff, warmed over Neil Simon. It seems as if the younger generation was raised on TV sitcoms. Young playwrights seem unaware that anything better exists. They are not familiar with Noel Coward, George Kelley, George S. Kaufman, and others of the old school who truly knew how to make us love and laugh.

One of the most tiresome aspects of Pines '79 is the constant harping on the use of "recreational" drugs as a means of solving every dilemma that arises. We get the impression that to be young and homosexual means you must be hooked on something exotic.

The play does exhibit occasional insights, as when one of the characters remarks to another about life in the early 1960's, "Everyone had a lover back then. There was nothing else to do." Lines like this cry out for further exploration.

Such exploration is not forthcoming, and this is a pity. We've all been to Fire Island and Polk Street once too often.

Previously I reviewed Jan Chambers comedy My Blue Heaven, a disaster that failed to ignite my imagination. But this time around Miss Chambers has surprised us. Last Summer at Bluefish Cove creates people we care about.

A group of Lesbian women have come to Bluefish Cove to spend the summer. (Staying at resort areas seems to be a habit amongs Gays). The heart of the action centers around Lil and Eva, who are falling in love. Lil battles cancer and is afraid to tell Eva, a frightened, confused woman, who has just left her husband. She has no previous lesbian experience.

Also in the group is Kitty, a strong-willed psychologist who has written a blazing tome of liberation. The Female Sexual Imperative.

The gals all laugh and fight among each other and the dialogue is refreshing and has a bite to it. The ending is somewhat inconclusive but the audience has a good time getting there.

Miss Chambers is an old hand at creating for the footlights (at least a dozen plays). With Bluefish Cove she proves that My Blue Heaven was only a beginning. Hopefully Theatre Rhino will see fit to produce this one. ■

Gays as they relive and work through the pains and sorrows of the past. A kind of death and rebirth take place. Success is usually the result of a spiritual surrender and the realization that we are not totally in control of our lives.

Fortunato emphasizes that a healing process can only emerge for Gays if the therapist is not blinded by a rejection of homosexuality. Otherwise, the patient will resist whatever course the therapy takes.

Embracing The Exile will cause much controversy among the high priests who surround the psychiatric altar. The refreshing waters of such heretical thoughts was badly needed in such areas as pas-paths of Gays who try to live Christianity and stay out of the shadows at the same time.

Our friend clearly outlines the problem. Traditional psychoanalysis exalts the ego at the expense of the spirit.

Embracing The Exile launches the heady trip of transforming and making whole the traditional enemy, Christianity.

The emphasis always remains on the self. Religious values are totally ignored. He underlines the necessity to let go of the self and advises us to stop seeking status at the expense of love and caring.

Fortunato feels we are currently trapped in an era of "post est megalomaniacs." He is especially critical of the EST movement, since it fosters a self-centered outlook.

He shares the stories of several Gays who have struggled against the rejection of straight friends and relatives and he also tells of his own struggles with rejection. Training and experience have taught him that a grieving and raging process is needed for toral psychology years ago. What a different world it might have been if such a man as John Fortunato had raised his voice in protest before now. Countless suicides and broken love affairs might have been steered in more creative directions. If only that well-meaning but ineffectual minister I had consulted years ago had at least been challenged by a band of Gay Christians.

Many Gays will be critical of this book and say that Christianity is the enemy. Traditionally this has been so, but the church, like everything else, can be transformed and made whole. Fortunato has launched us on a heady trip! ■

New York Trills
A Torch Song

'Torch Song Trilogy' Scores Off-Broadway

by George Heymont

Harvey Fierstein's tour de force as an actor and playwright has been gaining national attention in The Glines' production of Torch Song Trilogy. Two of the plays (International Stud and Fugue in a Nursery) have already been performed locally. The third piece, Widows and Children First!, however, is the clincher. Widows has been very carefully executed by Fierstein, leaving his audience in awe of his skills.

The first two plays give us Arnold, the lovable, frenzied drag queen. Arnold's brazen personality and caustic tongue are constantly at odds with the mushy romantic in his soul and crippling self doubts which tend to destroy everyone with whom he comes in contact. In his desperation to hold onto someone he loves (and in his insistence that his lover Ed not retreat back into the closet) Arnold's claws go into full heat. But nothing Arnold can do can quell the love he feels for Ed, no matter who else each chooses to live with. Eventually, Ed gets married, trying to convince himself that he's really straight. Arnold hitches up with a teenage hustler. But each still wants to test the other's love.

The second play, Fugue in a Nursery, allows that subtle battleground for relationships as Arnold and Alan visit Ed wardly recognize as inevitable.

It is the final play, however, that ties up all the loose lines with a devastating emotional impact. It is several years since Alan has been killed in a fag-bashing incident. Arnold has adopted a 16 year old Gay orphan. "They had me try everything," smiles David. "I went through EST, aversion therapy, rolling, and they finally came up with hopelessly homo and sent me to Arnold." At last Arnold has found a non-threatening relationship: mothering a Gay son. This is when Fierstein chooses to have Ed show up wanting to revive his relationship with Arnold at the same time that Arnold's classic Jewish mother arrives from Miami.

Mrs. Beckoff works on the firm principle that what you don't want to hear, you don't hear. Alas, for once she can't shut her eyes. Nor will Arnold let her tune out what he is saying. Forcing her to understand that his grief at Alan's death is every bit equal if not greater than her widowhood. Arnold finally forces an ultimatum on his mother: "Either respect me or there is no room for you in my life." How Fierstein resolves the crisis will leave theatergoers wrenched with emotion and elated by the play's honesty.

Fierstein heads up the small cast with a performance of poignant fragility and outrageous bravado. His bizarre voice takes a bit of getting used to (imagine Tallulah trapped in a busy air conditioning vent). Court Miller wisely underplays the role of

Ed, letting Fierstein dominate the stage. As Mrs. Beckoff, Estelle Getty deserves to be enshrined in the Smithsonian. A petite woman who has probably ironed her mascara before she applied it, Ms. Getty is an old pro. Her timing, bite and genuine pathos go past the easy stereotypes of monster mothers. Fisher Stevens' performance as David (Arnold's son) was one of the surprise highlights of the evening. An angelic waif who has been through too many foster homes, Stevens' character was the strongest statement to be seen on a stage about Gay youth wanting guidance and stability in their lives from older Gays. Torch Song Trilogy is far and away one of the best evenings of theater currently on display in New York. Its importance goes way past the definitions of Gay theater. It is about people learning to be honest with their lives. Under Peter Pope's able direction, Fierstein has made an impassioned plea for justice in the wake of the havoc we wreak upon ourselves. ■

Another Reason . . .

Twice a year, at each season's end, the San Francisco Pool Association throws a party, and you're invited. Last July's party was the biggest ever. Held at Trocadero Transfer, it was a memorable occasion for all who attended: this season it's at Trocadero again, and "the best yet," according to party organizer Ed Nathan. "We'll have vocalist Jessica Smith, set designs creating the mood of Mardi Gras in New Orleans, and it's going to be party, party, party . . . and certainly one of the best values of the season due to the fact that for the cost of admission, each person will receive a membership to Trocadero. We're having entertainment, awards for best costumes, and dancing 'til whenever." ■

BENEFIT FOR 'AIDS'

Nathan and his co-worker Lea Benson both feel the event will be the most successful yet, financially. Says Nathan, "I feel honored to be part of an event that will not only celebrate the excellence of pool playing in San Francisco but also all profits beyond SFPA cost will go to AIDS research."

THE MOVE TO TROCADERO

In previous seasons, the trophy presentations had customarily been held in one bar or the other — usually the White Swallow. Quiet affairs, they were. In '81 Mike Flowers, then league President, began promoting the idea of making trophy night a real event, a party. A few people were skeptical, recalling the loss the league suffered in its only previous attempt at such a party. In '79 they had the bands of Will Porter and Stoneground, imported palm trees. Harry Britt made a presentation to Luby Pelletier, Senator Milton Marks said a few words, a good time was had by all, and the league wound up in the red. So when it came time for the SFPA to produce another party, Flowers and his organizers were a little less extravagant and the league still had a few bucks when it was all over. The party was held at Amelia's, and when it drew to a close, newly-elected President Bill West was heard telling a few people, "This place may not be big enough next season." Everyone had thoroughly enjoyed themselves and wondered what he meant, but a few weeks later he revealed his plan. "I'm pretty sure we can get Trocadero Transfer," was his startling news. This prompted a "Here we go again" from a few who recalled '79. Indeed, it seemed he was shooting a little too high, but the more he talked, the more exciting the idea became.

KARL STEWART

OLD KNIGHTS PASS TO NEW

After an uncommonly depressing year, one sits down with one's favorite stuffed leather dog and thinks of both the good and troublesome things which have occurred. Making plans and a few resolutions is not too difficult, and one hopes for something which will provide some easy success. Success being in short supply these days, I think they probably laid off several thousand workers at the Success factory this year. I have met few who felt '82 was grand but more who have an optimistic (if not a bit gun shy) feeling about '83.

In the wake of lots of disappointments, however, there is a genuine and generous splash of richness about what happened last year. So/M saw numerous high quality art exhibitions and performance pieces. There were some great parties and superb entertainers. And fun . . . we did have fun. Dancing, laughing, and carrying on. Talk, groping, generally fucking each other's brains out.

The clear night brought calm and festive celebration to the hills and hollows of The City on New Year's Eve. Only a few of the many parties were fully packed, but all seemed to have a spirit of "Gaiety" (you'll pardon the expression).

The Ambush was packed to the rafters with the characteristic revelry of the burly mountaineer who populate that lair. Very high and calm.

Down the street, the jocks and levied studs of the Arena parted hardy with Bill, Steve, and Terry pouring the bubbly at midnight. At midnight, too, a little bit of the Big Apple was transported to So/M when J.C. lowered his lighted ball from dizzying heights to light up a big '83.

I was fortunate to receive an invite to the Catacombs' big New Year's Grease In. Exactly at 12 my daddy and I were wrapped in each other's arms in a dark corner. What a perfect way to ring in a New Year. They say that what you are doing at midnight on New Year's Eve will reflect the following year. I do hope so!

Back on the streets we saw a rowdy bunch at Febe's. The party was started when Empress Mae pulled up with her double-decker busload on a tour of the City. The invita-

The Arena wanted a theme for the photo show proposed by Matthew Newman, and he gave them one. Reach Out and Touch . . . Something is a Phone Fantasy that would make Ma Bell blush. The black and white enlargements pick up on the current trend towards phone sex, featuring gritty, greasy hunks and a telephone. There's no loose connection or dial tones. tion was a perfect way to begin the evening and I'll bet they were a pretty sight by the stroke of 12. Myra, Stan, Walt, and Peter all wore gorgeous buns and flashed disco bowties, and little else. Febe's does have the hottest bunch of B'tenders in town. A matched set, delicious.

The Brig, I'm told, was also festive. All that black leather squeaking against more black leather always makes me hungry.

As the juices of revelry coursed through our veins and the bars closed, we went off to see our friendly disco-mongers. Struggling against some disappointing contract cancellation, Joe's Shows Up, Out & On at the Harrison Street Theatre slashed their prices and drew a sparse but alive group to dance to the sounds of Steve Fabus.

Later we ran into LA LeatherPig Robert Burns. Reporting on the Troc, he said, "It was fine, three-quarters full of the hardcore Troc Family, celebrating together."

I walked into the I-Beam just in time to catch the end of The Ritchie Family's act, and they're always full of electricity. Dr. Kellman goes all the way with food, champagne, and great sound by Rob Kimbel, with sound design by Randy Schiller, who was turning back and forth between the Galleria and the I-Beam. One can't mention the I-Beam without paying tribute to Video Master Jack Williamson.

I asked Jacqui of the Family Ritchie how it felt to celebrate the "First Light" of '83 here in SF at in the I-Beam. She responded, "Loved it! To the Ritchie Family. Gay audiences have always been our folks. The success of our new album has brought us into a broader market, so doing a Gay club is like coming home. Thanks so much to you all."

FIRST LIGHTS, FIRST KNIGHT

When dawn turned to blinding sunlight we sought refuge in The Stables for their Hangover Party. The bar gradually filled with the bleary-eyed and the sparkling alike. Bruce and Ted among the former.

At the Eagle I had an unaccustomed a.m. bloody mary and Stella was the one who sparkled. Dennis Yount told me the End-Up was jammed with leather and feather alike. It carried on all day long there.

What does one do on New Year's Day? Watch the Rose Parade and a few games on the tube, then stop by friends' house parties of which there were many all weekend. Cleve Jones threw a stunning New Year's Eve soiree for the politically correct and incorrect alike. Jack Murnan had a hot group up to his chateau, for prawns, pate, and bubbles. Ron Reamer and Steve Douglas held a relaxed shindig in the late afternoon as we sipped Swedish Glogg and watched the City lights sparkle below.

Met Larice and the MC Craizes . . . still up from the night before. "How do you do it?" I remarked. "You look so fresh." Here is Larice's beauty hint of the week for the leather queen who stays up for two days. She advises, "Draw a steamy bath and pack Preparation H on your face and then let the steam work; the bags disappear!" I'm sure she'll have more helpful hints for us in the future.

David of the Men's Room stopped by. He gave the End-Up a rave. "It's still jumpin'!" he remarked.

Hope your New Year was as fun and effortless as mine.

ARTS DE KNIGHT

Among the notable efforts in the So/M art world is the Ambush's presentation of Dick Wheeler's oils. Wheeler has the irresistible quality of subjective masculinity. He has no need to be blatant about his subject. The technique and manliness speak to you.

Seeing work this strong is not an effort, but a pleasure.

At The Stables Rick and Steve sponsored the work of Fred Linde. As one of the founders of the Rainbow Deaf Society he has worked and played So/M for years. I never realized how much we depend upon sound to transmit our impression of the world until I saw Fred's visual exploration of his world of silence. Fred is decidedly an amateur, but his powerful expression crashes through the sound barrier like a dandelion pushes up through a crack in the cement. His work is diverse, too. It ranges from male eroticism like "Leatherman with Big Dick" and "The Henchman" to the joy of a clown called "Masked," to a stunning portrait of "Sophia." Not bad for only a year's work.

On other leatherly fronts, tall, handsome leather stud Christian Anderson will have a one-man show at Trinity Gallery on 1/9 in Berkeley at 2362 Bancroft Way. The Arena will feature the erotic and lustful lens of Matt Newman with a champagne reception on 1/12 at 8 p.m. Febe's own Peter will be the star of the show, "Reach Out and Touch Something" is the theme. I think I will.

Meet the Candidates

A Brief Introduction to Emperor and Empress Candidates

by Karl Stewart

EMPEROR

Mike Hopper has designed and dressed more Emperors and Emperesses than perhaps anyone else in the city. He is well-known as a behind-the-scenes money raiser for charity. He plays So/M and is running for the first time.

Royal is a member of the Barbary Coasters as well as a long-time member of The Coits (the Gay answer to the Bohemian Club). He is running for the first time also.

Tattoo Jim makes his home in the Tenderloin, where he enjoys tremendous popularity. This is also his premier sprint for the title.

Tom Vindeed has served as the Gay Softball League commissioner and was responsible for raising $50,000 for the Gay World Series, which was held in conjunction with the Gay Games. Like his peers, his is his first approach to the throne.

EMPRESS

Connie's talents as a performer have been lent to more fundraisers than can be counted. Connie is an accomplished cellist and has supported both Gay Chorus and the Gay orchestra since their inception. Known as a strong stage talent throughout the Tenderloin, motorcycle clubs, and So/M, this is Connie's fourth bid for the title.

Dee Dee Love is one of the Tenderloin's primary movers and shakers, raising both food and funds for seniors. Dee Dee is active in American Indian programs and is running for the first time.

Trixie has owned a tavern in San Francisco for a long time and has not only organized campaigns for the crown but backed them as well. Trixie is a serious candidate, even though not known as a skirt wearer. My source tells me Trixie felt it would be fun to be on the inside of the skirts for once.

No Holes Barred

KARR

Jason Sato's The Brig is a field day for the fake name, the nom de porno. The film, which is just opening a two-week run at Savages, has an eight-man cast. Over half of those men are San Franciscans, yet the only one with a name you'll recognize is Mickey Squires. I had great fun seeing people I knew and picking the right moniker for them from the scrambled credits.

Brig has six sequences loosely strung together and almost all "the good part." So you needn't feel imprisoned, but can go play and return whenever. There's no need to watch it in sequence.

As directed by Sato and filmed by the accomplished Nick Eliot, The Brig is as professional and assured a product as can be. It gives the first porno credit I can remember for an editor, Lee Ross, who has done well. The only element I didn't like was the music, which is a blot. Repeatedly interruptive, it is stylistically not unified, without continuity or relation to the action. Credit goes to Enzley Cohen, which sounds as much like a stage name as those of the cast members. The actors usually have sound reasons for the nom de porno. In Cohen's case I'm sure it was self-defense.

The Brig's hero is one very pretty, introspective lad with the on-screen name of David Ross. He's differently yet well-known locally. He's seen driving into San Francisco from the farm. "Just like clockwork," he sighs. "Going to the city . . . Jesus, these one night stands just kill me. It doesn't seem worth it." I told you he was introspective.

As soon as he's had these dour thoughts about our Eden we soar into the sky for some impressive aerial shots of San Francisco interrupted by a sharp cut to two youngsters making out in a bedroom. Is this symbolism? Are people in Iowa going to think this town is one big bedroom? Is this bedroom a metaphorical brig?

Since this blonde and brunette pair are attractive, one with fleshy protruding nipples and both with your basic, attractive all-American cock, I didn't think about these questions. We'll have a symposium later. These are the only two actors in the film I don't know, but since The Brig was filmed here, you might. I was distracted from The Name Game by some fascinatingly sharp closeups of their cocksucking, rimming and fucking. The brunette has some slow, deep grinds for the blonde. They reverse positions and the blonde goes after the brunette more aggressively, resulting in a JO gusher.

"Mr. Ross" has arrived in the city during this, but with his continual moping doesn't think he's ready to face the bars yet. So he goes to an art gallery "to cool down." Ah, the safe, sexless boredom of art.

The art gallery scene is blessed with the film debut of a model who used to advertise in this paper's classifieds as The Dago. At $20 he was inexpensive. I always planned to rent him, but waited too long, for he moved to New York. Seeing him in action I'm full of self-reproach. Come back, Dago! I can't figure out which of these screen names — Jim Stevens? Dick Cooper? — may be his. His co-star is a humpy blonde who hasn't left town, but may want to when I dish him. He seems lobotomized. Immobile, he stares into space. The

An open letter to the gay community on hepatitis B

Hepatitis B, a serious disease, may be sexually transmitted

Sexually transmitted diseases among the gay community are epidemic. Herpes has recently received a lot of attention; gonorrhea and syphilis are well known; but the Centers for Disease Control (CDC) recently issued a major recommendation for the prevention of another sexually transmitted disease: Hepatitis B. In their Morbidity and Mortality Weekly Report, the CDC stated: "Susceptible homosexually active males should be vaccinated [against hepatitis B] regardless of their age or duration of their homosexual practices."

Gay men are at a high risk of contracting hepatitis B

In one study, from 51% to 76% of 3,816 gay men seen in five sexually transmitted disease clinics had evidence of past or present hepatitis B infection. Once infected, there's a 6% to 10% chance of becoming a carrier—capable of passing on the virus. The CDC estimated there are nearly 1 million carriers in the United States and that 100,000 of these carriers are gay men.

The hepatitis B virus can be passed on by contact with contaminated body fluids

Sexually transmitted diseases among the gay community are epidemic. Herpes has recently received a lot of attention; gonorrhea and syphilis are well known; but the Centers for Disease Control (CDC) recently issued a major recommendation for the prevention of another sexually transmitted disease: Hepatitis B. In their Morbidity and Mortality Weekly Report, the CDC stated: "Susceptible homosexually active males should be vaccinated [against hepatitis B] regardless of their age or duration of their homosexual practices."

Hepatitis B may lead to even more serious complications

For those who do get symptoms of hepatitis B, a mild or severe "flu-like" sickness may continue for weeks or months. Ten percent of all infections become long lasting (chronic) with potential complications that are sometimes more serious than those of other sexually transmitted diseases. The serious complications include the chronic carrier state, chronic active hepatitis, chronic persistent hepatitis, cirrhosis, and even cancer of the liver. Every year almost 4,000 carriers die of cirrhosis. In addition, carriers have a risk 273 times greater than that of the general population of contracting a usually fatal form of liver cancer.

Now this serious sexually transmitted disease is usually preventable by vaccination with the new hepatitis B vaccine

After more than a decade of research and development, a new vaccine is available for prevention, not treatment, of hepatitis B. In clinical studies, the vaccine was highly effective in preventing hepatitis B infection and was generally well tolerated. No serious adverse reactions occurred in these studies.

The vaccination regimen consists of a series of three injections, the first two a month apart and the third, six months after the first. To be effective, the vaccine must be given before a person gets hepatitis B. The vaccine helps prevent the disease: It is not effective as a treatment. We suggest that you consult your doctor to determine if you should be vaccinated.

Why you should consult your doctor or clinic

The vaccine helps protect against infection caused by hepatitis B virus. This virus is an important cause of viral hepatitis, a disease mainly of the liver. Even mild forms of this disease may lead to serious complications and aftereffects, including liver cancer. There is no specific treatment for viral hepatitis.

Vaccination is recommended for persons who have a higher risk of becoming infected with hepatitis B virus because of frequent, close contact with infected people or exposure to body fluids from such people. It will not protect against hepatitis caused by viruses other than hepatitis B virus.

No serious adverse reactions were reported in over 6,000 individuals receiving the vaccine in clinical trials. The most frequent reaction was soreness at the point of injection; less common local reactions included redness, swelling, warmth, or formation of a hard, lumplike spot. The local effects were usually mild and lasted no more than 2 days after vaccination. Occasionally, low-grade fever (less than 101°F) occurred. When it did, it usually lasted no longer than 48 hours following vaccination. In rare cases, fever over 102°F was reported.

More generalized complaints including malaise, fatigue, headache, nausea, dizziness, muscle pain, and joint pain were reported infrequently. Rash was reported rarely. As with any vaccine, broad use may reveal additional adverse reactions.

Your doctor or clinic knows what special care must be taken when administering the vaccine and in determining who should receive the vaccine. The vaccine is not intended for persons who are allergic to any of its components.

BIG GAY TURNOUT

Jerry Berg Sworn in for Appeals Board

by George Mendenhall

"Some people are offering their condolences," joked Attorney Jerry Berg this week when he accepted an appointment to the city's prestigious Board of Permit Appeals. The Board is the "court of last resort" for citizens who claim that they have been treated unfairly by other city agencies. Berg was stepping in again to serve in a life thus far dedicated to public service.

Mayor Feinstein needed favorable press in the Gay community after her recent veto of domestic partners legislation. Her appointment will please a large number of Gay people and bring some negative response from those on the political left who consider Berg's political style too conservative.

The swearing-in ceremony brought out scores of well-wishers who filled the Mayor's outer offices and flowed into the hallway. Feinstein commented that she had never seen so many city supervisors at such a ceremony (present: Britt, Kennedy, Renne, Walker, Maher). City Treasurer Mary Callahan attended with numerous commissioners (including Jo Daly, Jane McKaskle Murphy, Richard Sevilla, Tom Horn and Libby Denebeim). Berg's parents were present and introduced.

The new official said he had heard that "the board hears some fascinating massage parlor cases. The bad news is that all of these cases are straight." He added that he had learned early from his mother that all people are equal and that the highest gift is to serve others.

Berg paid tribute to the Mayor for "your commitment to keep open the lines of communication with the Gay and Lesbian communities." He added, "This appointment is not just an acknowledgment of the presence of Gays and Lesbians in our city but a reflection of our ability to participate in the full range of decisions affecting all San Franciscans."

Feinstein, in turn, praised Berg as a person who has "a judicial temperament for fairness and a thoughtful use of common-sense." She said, "Jerry is a person of great perception and quiet understanding who is respected throughout the legal community for his reasoned advocacy and commitment to excellence."

FEINSTEIN CONTROVERSY

Berg talked with this reporter earlier in his Union Square law offices about his concern that he might be isolating himself from the rest of the Gay community by accepting the appointment. He said, "I know the mayor has been criticized by many because of her veto of the domestic partners legislation. I telephoned my concern to several Gay leaders and everyone seemed to encourage me to accept."

How does Berg think about the vetoed legislation? He said he personally urged the Mayor to sign it because it was politically the right thing for her to do. The attorney said he had personal reservations about the original legislation. Berg stressed, "Of course it is inevitable that many benefits now enjoyed only by married partners will be extended to other partners. The 1980 census said that only 27% of the population lives in conventional marriage situations. There is a beginning of an evaluation of how people really live that will result in benefits for many others."

Is there now a restoration of the "Gay" seat on the Board of Permit Appeals? Berg had no comment, but that is what is being repeated in the Gay community. Harvey Milk was appointed to the board by Mayor George Moscone. Later, Attorney Rick Stokes, next David Scott, and finally for a brief spell, activist Jo Daly held the seat. No Gay person was appointed after Daly left but a recent vacancy resulted in the latest Gay appointment.

Agnos Rescues Gay TV Spot

Assemblyman sees good chances for AB1

by Margaret Frost

Assemblyman Art Agnos brought good news about a controversial "mental wellness" spot and the future of AB1 to the first 1983 meeting of the Alice B. Toklas Memorial Democratic Club.

In an eleventh hour CIA-type action ("I met someone in a garage.") Agnos was able to salvage one of the TV commercials promoting positive Gay images before Governor Jerry Brown left office. The films were produced by the state Health and Welfare Agency last year as an effort to promote mental wellness by depicting positive images of various segments of the population. The ones dealing with Lesbians and Gays were held back after production because Agency Director Mario Obledo claimed they constituted advocacy.

"In the spot that will be released, Abigail Van Buren talks in a positive way about a letter from a woman with a Lesbian daughter," Agnos explained. "Pat Norman did a great job of developing these messages, and it's too bad we couldn't save the others."

The San Francisco Democrat also seemed confident about the chances of passing AB1 (which prohibits discrimination in housing and employment based on sexual orientation) this year. "We have the most progressive legislature that I've seen in my 16 years in Sacramento," he pointed out. "We have an unprecedented number of co-authors including Tom Hannigan, who comes from a very conservative district. This is response to the active lobbying going on all over the state."

"A similar bill was recently passed by the Wisconsin legislature. One thing they did which we haven't yet is get the churches involved. The Archbishop of Milwaukee was a very strong supporter and there was a consortium of Catholic and Protestant hierarchy throughout the state. I intend to work on that much more vigorously."

Agnos asked for letters to go to Jim Costa, a swing vote on the Labor Committee, where the bill is now being considered. He said that Costa, a Fresno Democrat, is leaning toward a "yes" vote, but needs to be pushed.

The Assemblyman also reiterated his regret over his vote for SB 1025, which allows police to sue citizens who make false complaints of misconduct. He vowed to fight SB 34, a new bill which makes such complaints a misdemeanor.
