No Sales to Minors, Warnings Must Be Posted

by George Mendenhall

San Francisco has adopted the strictest law in the country to inform the public about the possible health hazards of alkyl nitrite products, popularly known as "poppers." The Board of Supervisors unanimously passed an ordinance this week, without discussion, that forbids sales to anyone under 18 years of age and requires the posting of bold "May Be Hazardous to Your Health" warnings.

The supervisors also passed a resolution which urges the federal government's Consumer Product Safety Commission to require label warnings on the bottles of so-called "room deodorizers" because they are often used as inhalants. The city resolution states that while the "long-term effects of inhaling alkyl nitrites are not known, several different recent studies have suggested that long-term use may possibly impair the body's immune system."

WARNINGS

Poppers are sold under various brand names such as Rush, Head, Crypt Tonight and Bullet. During an October 14 hearing before the supervisors' Health Committee, Supervisor Doris Ward called for passage of city legislation, at the least, to inform the public of the possible hazard of popper usage as an inhalant and alleged sexual stimulant.

The city health director, Mervyn Silverman, had cited cases where people had died while using poppers. He said possible harm could result in usage, as the products alter the blood and restrict its ability to carry oxygen. Silverman said that the use of poppers has not been proven to cause AIDS but that its usage could be part of the overall condition that reduces the body's immune system.

An earlier poppers hearing was held before a supervisors' committee in 1982. The recent advent of AIDS stimulated renewed interest this year, and poppers were among some of the first suspects. Poppers are not advertised as inhalants so government agencies have had difficulties controlling use of the substance. The Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act, enforced by the federal Food and Drug Administration, regulates the sale of drugs and devices intended to affect the structure of any function of the human body. However, manufacturers have insisted that they are only producing incense and room deodorizers.

Poppers are often advertised in the sexual advertising sections of the alternate press and frequently sold in sexually oriented businesses. Their usage in the Gay community is often related to what some users claim is an enhancement of the sex act—particularly during ejaculation.

Gays and Mission Cops on Better Terms in '83

by Allen White

San Francisco Police Officer Jeffrey Williams was fired last week by the San Francisco Police Commission. Williams, 27, had been stationed at Mission Station last year and was involved in the arrests of an aide to the mayor and a prominent staff member of Grace Cathedral at Collingwood Park.

The departure of Williams from the police department is another in a year-long series of events which have achieved a remarkable and harmonious relationship between the Gay community and the San Francisco police.

In August 1982 relationships in the Castro with the police and the Gays had deteriorated to the deepest depths. At the center of the controversy were arrests made in the area of Collingwood Park. Tales of vicious police violence at the Mission Station were rampant.

The turning point was a community meeting at the Women's Building. It was attended by many members of the Board of

Psychiatrist's Car Found Ditched in Reno

by George Mendenhall

Police have found the blue 1982 Honda of murdered psychiatrist Thomas Laskey, 42, in downtown Reno this week. Laskey was strangled to death in his Twin Peaks apartment late on the night of November 21 or early on the 22nd. Officers discovered Laskey on the floor at 9 a.m. on the 23rd after his employers at Napa State Hospital became concerned about his whereabouts.

A recent photograph of slain psychiatrist Thomas Laskey. Investigators are seeking help from his friends and acquaintances.

"Laskey was a low profile person," Police Inspector Jeff Borsch told this reporter, "who kept to himself. He would bring people to his apartment that he picked up off the streets, every once in awhile." The dwelling was a two-bedroom apartment, although Laskey lived alone.

The victim had been strangled with bare hands. His arms were tied to his legs by a cord. His shoes were off as he lay prone on his living room floor. He was otherwise fully clothed, including a tie and sweater. The apartment was neat in appearance, and the only apparent missing item was Laskey's wallet.

"There was no sexual activity," Officer Brosch concludes, "because the bed was not disturbed." The officer evidently did not allow for possible sexual activity that did not involve the bed. It is also possible that the murder occurred immediately after the two entered the apartment and closed the door.

The murderer took the psychiatrist's wallet and used one of his credit cards to obtain lodging at the Midtown Lodge, 611 W. 2nd Street in downtown Reno. The hotel is not known as a Gay establishment. Later, when the credit card charge was rejected, a check of the room revealed that the attacker had fled in Laskey's car. The car was abandoned eight blocks from the hotel.

DESCRIPTION

The Midtown Lodge management was able to give this description of the alleged killer: White; male; slight build; 5'10"; 25; 140 lbs.; short, light brown hair; light colored eyes, possibly blue. Reno police have checked the Gay bars in the Reno/Sparks area but they have no leads at this time.

Police investigators have not yet talked to patrons or employees of two of Laskey's favorite Gay bars here, the Alta Plaza and Pacific Exchange on upper Fillmore Street. The bars are considered relatively sedate establishments that do not have a reputation as hustler hangear.

EARLIER ASSAULT

The psychiatrist had been the victim of an earlier assault one year ago when he took two young men home that he met at a donut shop at 18th and Castro. The two attackers beat Laskey badly, destroying almost every bone in his face. Borsch said that Laskey described his house guests as white males with brown hair and in their 20's.

One called himself "Tim" and was slender while the other was described as muscular and called himself "Chuck." Police have received no follow-up information on the December 5, 1982, assault. Borsch said that the male who killed Laskey was not one of those suspects.

Laskey was not widely known in the Gay social or political circles in San Francisco. He lived quietly near the Castro area in a view apartment and commuted to his job at Napa Hospital, a state mental health facility. He had worked at Napa for six years. The physician had been a specialist in thoracic and cardiovascular surgery in the 1970's but his eyes began to fail. He wore very thick eyeglasses and was forced to end his surgical career due to failing eyesight. He re-entered college and obtained the proper degree to practice psychiatry.

The victim was a Chicago native who graduated from Loyola University's School of Medicine in 1966. It is not known when he moved to San Francisco.

"We don't have much on this case," Officer Borsch reports. "We are holding back on some secrets about the murder that we cannot reveal. However, we need help from anyone who knew Dr. Laskey and who might be able to help us in our investigation." Police are interested in knowing more about Laskey's behavioral patterns, his activities on the night of his murder. Borsch may be contacted at 553-1145, or contact this newspaper.

One More 'Homosexual Panic' Defense Rejected

Jury Convicts Slayer of San Diego Accountant

by Neal Putnam
For Update, Special to the Bay Area Reporter

San Diego, CA - A jury last week convicted a man of second degree murder in the death of a Gay accountant in what the defendant's own psychiatrist dubbed a "homosexual panic"

The San Diego Superior Court jury deliberated only one day before finding Robert Eady, 27, guilty November 16 of the murder of Vince Leon, 37. Leon was hit in the head July 8 with a shovel nine times in his Chula Vista home.

Eady admitted he struck Leon, but told the jury it was only after he was outraged that Leon made a pass at him. Eady was working for Leon as a gardener and the advance occurred when both were sitting on a couch in Leon's home, Eady said.

Eady's psychiatrist, Jose Fernando Bayardo, told jurors Eady struck Leon in "a homosexual panic" after Leon's advances aroused "suppressed homosexual urges."

Eady's attorney, Jose Taffola, said Eady was sexually assaulted by two 16-year-old males when he was 12 and Leon's pass reminded him of the experience. Taffola urged the jury to convict him of either voluntary or involuntary manslaughter.

But Deputy District Attorney Bob Hammes sought to portray Eady as a man who wanted to "punish" Leon because of his possible "latent homosexuality."

horrified at homosexuality . . . approaches a homosexual for work," Hammes argued.
"He allows this man to get close to him and put his arm around him," Hammes said, using Eady's own words to police after he was arrested.

After Eady refused to have for about a minute and returned with a shovel and struck him repeatedly, the prosecutor said.

"He left that man moaning and dying — this so sensitive individual," Hammes said. "It may have been done because of the homosexual feelings it may have aroused. He killed in revenge. He was very, very angry."

Taffola said Eady had been drinking heavily that day and the entire incident happened quickly. Eady is divorced and has two children.

Ironically, if Eady had not told police first about his role, the case might have went unsolved. After the slaying, Eady took Leon's truck and drove to Fresno. He took a bus to San Francisco, only to turn himself in at the police station there.

San Francisco officers testified Eady told them of the murder and his role. But Chula Vista police told San Francisco's officers they knew of no recent murder.

Eady gave the police Leon's address and later in the day they found the body, still in the living room. Eady remained voluntarily at the police station even though he had difficulty persuading them the slaying had occurred.

Sentencing is set for December 14 and Eady faces a 15-years-to-life term in state prison.

nitrites ('poppers'). Inhaling or swallowing alkyl nitrites may be harmful to your health. These chemicals can cause skin rashes, nasal irritation, sinus or lung infections, and rarely, severe anemia. Inhaling concentrated alkyl nitrite vapors may cause you to faint and could be very dangerous if you have a hidden heart disease.

"Whether continued use of alkyl nitrites may affect the immune system is not known, but several different studies have suggested that some impairment of the immune system is possible."

Much of the research and lobbying that led to the new poppers measures was orchestrated by a longtime Gay activist, Hank Wilson. The Bay Area Physicians for Human Rights, a Gay doctors group, and health care consultant Dr. Robert Bolan assisted by educating the supervisors.

Wilson praised Supervisor Ward and her aide, Brandy Moore, who took an early interest in the poppers issue. He also recognized Supervisor Nancy Walker and the City Attorney's office for their cooperation.

The new ordinance exempts pharmacists, veterinarians, and medical doctors. A violation would be a misdemeanor subject to a maximum fine of $500 or/and six months in jail.

There must be a final vote on the Board measures this Monday. The unanimous vote this week indicates that there will not be reversal.

Gay Suicide Study Now in Progress

A research project investigating suicide in the Gay community is now being conducted in San Francisco. The study is seeking information from Gay men who have recently attempted suicide.

According to Peter Gold-

blum, the study coordinator, "The findings of this study will assist health professionals to focus more clearly on the range and complexity of issues presented by their Gay clients." Peter Goldblum is a psychotherapist with a special interest in Gay health and medical concerns. He teaches a course in Gay health issues at the Castro/Valencia branch of City College. Several Bay Area hospitals and mental health organizations, including Pacific Medical Center, San Francisco General Hospital, and Operation Concern are assisting in this project.

Gay men who have attempted suicide within the past six months will be given a questionnaire which takes about an hour and ten minutes to complete. If you have attempted suicide within the past six months and wish to participate in this project, please contact Peter Goldblum by calling 391-0103. All inquiries will be held in strictest confidence.

SF's Muni: Getting Us Somewhere or Nowhere?

New Muni Head Pledges the Best Yet Part I

by Allen White

"I can't take it anymore" is a routine thought as thousands of San Franciscans try to anticipate the next crisis in their transportation system, the Municipal Railway.

There is the question of headways, the lack of schedules, and countless delays. Then customers are faced with the erratic habits of drivers ranging from rudeness and jumping stops to crazy driving. Finally, there is the subject of the vehicles, whether it be Muni Metro's roasting temperatures, scratchy bus windows, or ripped seats.

Facing these problems head on is Harold Geissenheimer. He is the person chosen one year ago to be the General Manager of Muni. He firmly backs his employees and follows a pattern of identifying a problem and following through to a solution. Supervisor Richard Hongisto, head of the board's transportation committee, is extremely critical of Muni, yet gives Geissenheimer high marks for his work in the last year.

Hongisto, like many of the supervisors, is very much aware of the problems that plague Muni. He cites the example of how he tried unsuccessfully to get a bus stop relocated in front of a hospital to help seniors who wanted to be closer to a medical facility. There was simply nothing he could do, he said, to get Muni to relocate the stop. Hongisto reasons that if he, a supervisor, can't get the Muni to respond, how much harder will it be for people who are not elected officials.

Richard Hongisto breaks

Getting downtown from the Castro becomes a daily decision. What way will get me to work on time? (Photo: Rink) down the Muni problems to an unresponsive bureaucracy, bad management, and many fundamentally bad decisions. He concludes that it will take at least five years to turn around the Muni operation.

ERRATIC SCHEDULES

The most horrendous

scheduling problems exist on the underground Muni Metro system. Most regular users of the system can expect at least one delay a week getting to and from the downtown area. Explanations to bosses about Muni are commonplace in the Financial district. At the merging of the N-Judah line and the J-Church, the coupling process at Church and Market can take up to ten minutes. The mechanical pro-blems on the light rail vehicles (LRV) are usually traced to the computer induced commands to the brakes, propulsion, and door systems. Simply stated the system is so complicated it malfunctions, again and again.

The electrified trolley lines are the victim of scheduling problems for a number of reasons. Heavy traffic and weather contribute to delays. Far more aggravating is a Muni driver trick utilizing a switchback procedure. A driver will slow down his driving to be enough behind schedule so that he can cut his route and switchback the bus. On the 22-Fillmore this is done heading north at Union, on the 24-Divisadero at Sutter. After switching back the driver is then ahead of schedule. He then takes a break while he waits for the schedule to catch up with his. run. In the meantime, the passenger waits for a bus that simply will not be around. Not surprisingly, Muni management deny this practice.

Diesel bus riders also feel the effect of missed routes. It is not uncommon for drivers to take their lunch or dinner to the end of the line and simply miss a run routes where this is practiced are

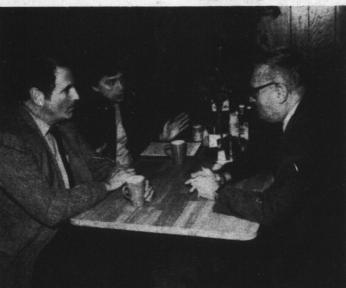

As with many things in life, the secret in these violations is not in the doing but in not getting caught. It is no secret within Muni that many of the line coordinators simply could care less. In past years they were called inspectors, came up through the ranks and carried power and respect. This has changed. One area of heavy criticism in recent vears has been the internal midlevel management reforms putting managers out in the street who knew less than the people they supervised. The result has been a "don't tell on me, I won't tell on you" philosophy running through the entire transportation system.

Under General Manager Harold Geissenheimer the system of driver discipline is being tightened considerably. A process is being put into place which can result in warnings, suspensions, and dismissal Recently a hint of this new policy came to public attention when it was discovered that maintenance workers would sign reports for work they, in fact, had not performed.

The Muni Metro is now the subject of intense study to reduce delays. There will be many changes in the next few months on the J-Church. Geissenheimer plans to schedule the use of two car trains on the J and the N Lines. With this will come a feasability study to consider routing the J line on the surface and the possible introduction of the historic trolley

One goal is to minimize the coupling of the LRV cars. The more coupling, the more the chance of a delay with the sensitive cars. Additionally, there are 21 new LRV cars being added next Spring. This will bring the number of Muni Metro cars to 103 in operation, a substantial increase.

Muni Metro passengers have recently begun to hear train location announcements in rush hour. It is part of an overall plan the 17-Lake Merced run, the 54- to upgrade communications in

Miraloma and the 37-Corbett where drivers munch atop Twin Peaks. When questioned, Muni spokespersons also denied this activity took place.

They also denied another trick practiced on the diesel busses. It is not that uncommon for drivers on a split shift to return at the beginning of the afternoon rush hour to pick up their bus. The bus leaves the yard and then a few minutes later the driver simply drives back into the yard, parks the bus and goes home. Again, Muni denied that this was possible.

the subway stations. Until recently, riders might wait a half an hour to finally be told what they already knew, that there was a delay. Usually the station agent knew nothing of a delay and was of little help to the frenzied late passenger. Next year another modification will be introduced to provide the passenger with even more information. The theory is that if a passenger knows he has a twenty minute wait, he may choose to take alternate surface transportation.

Bundestag Has Its Harvey Milk in Herbert Rusche

Herbert Rusche is West Germany's most visible and well-known Gay figure.

The 31-year-old political activist from Hesse is a member of the Green Party (Die Grunen) in the Bundestag, the national parliament. Rusche is one of four openly Gay politicians in all of West Germany; he is the Harvey Milk of German Gays.

Rusche was in San Francisco these past two weeks. He was the guest of the Harvey Milk Archives, and he spoke at City Hall November 27. He was proud of his speech. "It was my first speech in English," said the personable German. A member of the working class - with only technical training and no university background, Rusche never studied English. "All the English I know," he said, "I learned from American GI's.' And not unsurprisingly, Rusche speaks and sounds American as opposed to British. He knows the "lingo" — in particular Gay American camp talk.

The party is based on four concerns: Ecological, Grass Roots Democracy, Social Equality, and Pacifism. It was founded in Rusche was one of the founding members of the party. As a Gay activist, he brought those concerns to the party's consciousness and platform. He then worked for the Green Party in his state of Hesse. He was employed as its general secretary. At a party convention, he stood for election for the national parliament. The Green Party took 28 seats (out of 520) in the last election, and though small they have been causing quite a stir ever since.

The Greens to avoid becoming stale (and complacent) in office put up two nominees for each four-year term of office. The first contingent is serving for the first two years; Rusche is part of the second two years, and while waiting to take his seat attends the parliamentary sessions, listening to the debates, engaging in party caucuses. He gets half the alloted salary of his sitting alternate. Rusche's proudest platform is that his mission is "not to get Gays into Green issues, but to get the Greens into Gay issues. And he has found for all the progressiveness of his cohorts, Gay ssues manage to get overlooked, if not forgotten. To emphasize his primary concern, Rusche

Green Party members, he recounted, are often chided by their fellow Bundestagers for being unkempt, for being unruly, for lacking decorum.

Recently, Rusche said, one of the Green Party's women gave her maiden speech in parliament on a revolutionary feminist platform: wages for housework, a woman's rights to her body, child care, etc. Her remarks so incensed other house members that they were standing on their seats catcalling her, stamping their feet, shaking their fists, booing and hissing. "They threw their revered decorum out the window," Rusche noted.

All the same, if the feminist orogram causes such an outurst, Rusche senses that when his turn comes, he'll bring down the Bundestag in a Wagnerian

Atlas S & L Winds Up A Stunning 1983

Construction Proceeds, Stock Splits, New Offering on Tap

by Paul Lorch

Atlas Savings & Loan issued its year-end progress reports this week. The purpose of the update, said new Public Relations Director Kim Cortright, was "to keep the community up to date on what's going on." Cortright came to Atlas from the Golden Gate Business Association, where he had been Executive Secretary.

West German Opens Account at Atlas - Herbert Rusche, the first openly Gay man to be elected to the West German parliament, recently was in San Francisco to sightsee, meet with leaders of the Gay community, and open an account at Atlas Savings, the world's first Gay savings and loan. Cortright stated that the new one million dollar branch office on Castro Street was under construction, and he had these

The spacious new building, which is scheduled for completion in the summer of 1984, will be comprised of two floors plus a mezzanine and a full basement, making it the largest new financial facility to be built in the Castro area in many years. Cortright stated, however, that with the bad weather, things are bit behind schedule.

The new branch office will be lirectly across from the landmark Castro Theater. Real estate experts consider the location to be the neighborhood's prime block because of the extensive foot traffic generated by the Castro Street MUNI Metro

The main floor of the building will be set back five feet from the sidewalk to accommodate two automatic teller machines in secured glass booths, allowing privacy and safety. Also on the main floor will be a night depository for merchants, a spacious banking area with eight teller windows, two private merchant windows, a large vault, and extensive space for safety deposit boxes. The second floor will house executive offices, accounting functions, conference rooms, and the data processing department.

The mezzanine level, said Cortright, features a glasswalled conference room, skylights, and an open-air patio for employee use. A full basement will be used for storage of financial records. The building will be equipped with an elevator and is wheelchair accessible. It is expected that the loan department will not be moved to the new Castro Street office, but will remain at Atlas' main office on Market at Duboce because of parking availability.

be a showplace for the upper Market Street neighborhood. The architectural firm of Neeley/Lofrano, which specializes in the design of financial institutions, was hired to create a contemporary building that would also be warm and invitwould also be warm and invit-ing. The exterior of the structure will be a combination of reflec-tive and non-reflective glass, with a free-standing steel facade reminiscent of the Victorian architecture of nearby buildings on Castro Street.

The interior will have the look of Atlas' main office on Market Street with curved walls and prevalent colors of gray, blue and tan. The most striking interior architectural feature will be a large circular skylight that extends from the first floor teller area to the executive offices on the second floor and to the rooftop skylight. The construction firm is Crystal Construction of Concord, and they have been told to hire Gay subcontractors where ever they can.

As the site was cleared, excitement began to build in the Castro area about the new building. Said Jay Johnson, president of the Eureka Valley Merchants Association, "I am very pleased about Atlas' new Castro Street branch and impressed with their progressive attitude toward the neighborhood. This new construction signifies Atlas' belief in the future growth of the area."

Johnson continued, "I've seen the plans for the building and I feel it will improve and enhance the whole street. Atlas is a symbol of the financial strength of Gay people everywhere in the Bay Area and the new building will be a source of pride for all currently. John A. Schmidt, board chairman of Atlas, indicated that future plans for the savings and loan call for a satellite branch in downtown San Francisco, where many Gay men and women work. "We want to be near our customers," said Schmidt, "and it's a myth to think that all of the Gay community lives and works in the upper Market Street area."

Atlas has been a struggle to realize, but a success from the first. The savings and loan has over 1600 shareholders who purchased the original issue of 160,000 shares. The offering price was $12.50 per share. By October of 1983 the price had reached $19 per share, and that month the board of directors declared a 3 for 2 stock split for stockholders as of November 15.

To date Atlas boasts of some 11,000 depositors from all of the 50 states and several foreign nations. Presently it has 36

One of the bank's weaknesses has been its staff problems. A constant turnover of personnel has not been lost on either stockholders or customers. Some attribute the lack of staying power or inability to hold onto workers as growing pains. Critics say it has been the result of poor management. Bank officials in turn suggest poor work habits or insufficient skills. Still a visit to an Atlas branch to do business is a different kind of experience. As an arena of Gay hopes, highjinks, and happiness a bank transaction becomes something else. Not everyone customers, workers, management — have adapted well to that "something else."

The next Atlas move is the ssuing of a new stock offering.

The board is awaiting state government and SEC approval. The proceeds will go to finance the new Castro branch office rather than draw on existing assets. The announcement weeks. Current stockholders traditionally have first chance to acquire more Atlas S&L stock.

The City Hall Connection

Peter Nardoza, long-time aide to Dianne Feinstein, leaves his City Hall senior staff position at month's end. In a career advancement move, Nardoza goes to a top managerial slot

The pay is better, the responsibilities are greater, and the air is cleaner. And if he does his job well, in a number of years we can see him as the Director of the airport. He will have worked his way up in urban government much the way Tom. Malloy has worked and earned his way to the top of Parks

Peter worked with Dianne Feinstein for years, when she was but one of the supervisors with aspirations. And while it was no secret he was Gay in his personal life, those were the days when it was nobody's business in professional life. Feinstein took Peter with her into the mayor's front parlor and increasingly used him in Gay situations. She took him to Gay constituent luncheons and meetings. He fronted for her in the Gay clubs. He carried her banner in debates, confrontations, and happenings. He was her Gay troubleshooter. And a good

In turn, he began to serve increasingly as a conduit of Gay concerns to the mayor.

If there was something one felt the mayor should know, be warned about, or urged to attend to, often the easiest, fastest, and most successful route was through Peter Nardoza. He served both the mayor and the Gay community well in this capacity. It wasn't that this was his job classification; it evolved as one of the things that he did.

And when Peter fell prey to a homophobic police dragnet, he told his boss, she stood behind him, and he went public with his story of outrage of what happened to him and what he witnessed at Mission Police Station. Today there is a new captain at Mission, and just last week the police officer in question was ousted from the force by the Police Commission for the Nardoza-like escapades and other drug arrest

Nardoza's departure from the mayor's cabinet (so to speak) leaves a void. Not in job classification, or title, for there is no position as "Secretary of Gay Issues" a la "Secretary of Agriculture." The void will occur in what evolved as one of Nardoza's functions.

The "whatness" of Nardoza's work in the mayor's inner circle should not be fertile ground allowed to go fallow, or put into some sort of soil bank because right now no Gay crisis is pressing on the mayor.

One trap exists that we would all do well to step around. The situation is not akin to when a vacancy occurs on, say, (Continued on next page)

On Morgan MacDonald's Funeral Service

* I would like to comment on Allen White's article regarding the memorial service for Morgan

I was very thankful to read this article because I felt it to be a much more honest portraval of Morgan than the memorial held on November 3.

Being a very private person, I doubt if he would have invited people into his life like this, or given his consent for such a service. From knowing Morgan, his outlook on life and society followed very pagan lines, not conventional or religious in any way.

The circumstances regarding his death are indeed tragic. He was used as a pawn in the health care system, and now after his death, by those who just needed to

Demetrhea Terrien

As a friend of Morgan MacDonald I am writing this

Morgan was an introspective sensitive man. Had he been able to control his own memorial service, he would have chosen a service vastly different.

I know that it was a very difficult task at best and well intended, but perhaps if Mr. Gordon finds himself in that same position in the future, he will take the advice of those close to the person. That would be the best insurance of a meaningful service in keeping with the person's beliefs

What a Manic-depressive Can Do

* I was in the depths of my own personal bout with manic-depressive illness, alcoholism, and drug abuse during the Moscone/Milk assassinations, so much of the trial testimony came as a surprise to me when I viewed the Dan White special on KQED November 30. The psychiatric testimony was so much mindless

The very idea that a person with M/DI cannot premeditate, or have malice aforethought is absurd. I disposed of my scum-bag ex-lover every day for 2 years in my fantasies, in the most exquisitely agonizing and most gory ways.

But the bitch walks amongst men because, even at the lowest point of my sickness. I knew that to realize throwing away my life for absolutely nothing. I also was consoled by the sure knowledge that it would drink itself to death.

But then had I been an all-American macho idiot darling of the establishment, things might have been

* We found Tom Roger's column, printed in the November 23rd issue, both refreshing and informative. We would like to see more of Roger's writing.

Ever since Mr. Marcus left B.A.R., there has been a void in the area of Leather Community information Tom Rogers appears to be well suited to fill this void. His style is informative, definitive and he obviously knows the Leather Community. Moreover, although his column is primarily aimed at the Leather Con munity, his "Bike Watch" should be of interest to all

In sum, Rivets with Tom Rogers would be a welcome (and needed) addition on a regular basis to vour newspaper.

* Maria Callas has been dead for years and yet the very mention of her name is still enough to arouse controversy - not only among opera queens, but also those who don't know the slightest thing about opera. Surely that says it all.

Cameras Everywhere

★ 1984 is around the corner. George Orwell professed some 30 years ago in his book 1984 that Big Brother would be watching. Well, friends, it's not quite 1984 and Big Brother is watching - everything!!

The pretense used for our unasked-for overseer is for "our protection," namely on a few Muni buses as of late. I would ride the 47-Van Ness and would notice a camera watching, "for our protection." This camera will protect me from what?! If a hoodlum is going to rob me or beat me up, a camera will not stop him All our suspect has to do is exit at the first available stop, scot-free. As for me or you, we are maybe broke and in pain. The camera has served the purpose of recording for posterity. (How about a security guard? Create needed jobs for those that need.) Now answer, how in the hell is a camera going to protect us? Don't anyone say as a deterrent

Big Brother is watching us in the supermarket (to prevent shoplifting, of course), in Metro stations under e pretense "for our protection," I'm sure. He's watching in banks, too. Anywhere else you've noticed? The next time you see a camera watching you, ask yourself why.

Happy New Year!

★ This is not to defend a columnist of the B.A.R although some defense seems to be indicated. It is to criticize an attitude of a member of our leather community and is in response to a letter from Mr. Sid(nev) Apostopoulous which appeared in your last edition of the B.A.R.

I would be willing to bet that I could describe to a "T" Mr. Sid(ney) without ever having met him. Mr. Sid(nev) is so uninformed. Perhaps I can enlighten him and help him to better understand. Perhaps I can help to bring to him the reality that we are all one under the skin, that each of us has a heart that beats, a soul, feelings, and, without the clothes, is as capable of any kind of love, or sex, as he is.

I have spent years building up an understanding and a rapport with our leather community. I have been to most all of the South of Market bars many times in drag. Many of the South of Market "truly leather persons" have been to our functions elsewhere. We under stand each other. We like each other. Our manner of dress has not diminished our love and respect for each other. Mr. Sid(nev)'s admonitions, criticisms and diatribes are not representative of most of the leather community I know, love and respect. I am not a drag queen. I wear dresses and wigs and makeup, high heels, jewelry (and corsets). But, I am not a drag queen. On T-Room Sex

* The Soft-Cell concert at the Kabuki theatre would've had to come up 10 points to be dull. The lead singer did some very poor Judy Garland imitations and the show was that during intermission I went to the toilet. In the next stall a man and a woman were having sex. The usher came in and said in a loud voice, "The ladies room is next door." I remarked to a rather fidgety man at the urinal, "These heterosexuals are always having sex in restrooms!

Holy Redeemer

★ This letter is in support of P. Lorch's editorial note in the December 1 B.A.R.

It's about time! After reading your wonderful response to that self-serving, self-proclaimed, Catholic gay activist, I am in total agreement.

Having been in the city since the sixties - when a gay activist was a fag who ducked so as not to be hit by a flying beer bottle, it does my old heart good to see - in part - what we all know to be true of these office-sittin' activists.

The Catholic church is no friend of mine. The Vatican would bring back witch burning and the Inquisition if they could to rid themselves of us perverts - as they did one other time.

When will the city wise up and pull the plug on these

What community service? What Hotline? Indeed!

P.S. It just makes me furious - reading and listening to all this pious Bullshit! - when we all know its just a screen to con more grant money out of the city when the money could help so many of our own, in so many different ways!

On Holy Redeemer

★ Thank you for your supportive comments in the current issue of B.A.R. addressed to the pastor of Most Holy Redeemer Church. The way in which Fr. Maguire handled his end of this affair in the face of a high degree of integrity and commitment on the part of our (Dignity) Board of Directors raised many questions of ethical responsibility on his part.

In another not unrelated matter, your comments came at a time when I was formulating a letter of support for the Archbishop of Seattle who was recently under investigation by the Vatican and who, you will recall, graciously welcomed us at our recent convention, and permitted us the use of St. James Cathedral for our principal Liturgical service.

My principal purpose in writing this note, which I intended to write anyway, was to thank you for your continued support of our efforts.

Church Goer

* As a parishioner of Most Holy Redeemer Church. I am compelled to respond to your sharp retort to Pastor McGuire's letter (November 17, 1983). For your future reference, a bigot is a person "who is utterly intolerant of any creed, belief, or opinion that differs from his ther) own." Father McGuire has not shown this utter intolerance to be labeled such.

While Rev. McGuire may be intolerant of the gay sex style, as reflected in your explicit ads, he has been equally intolerant of violence within the family. discrimination on the basis of race or sexual orientation, and nuclear war. Likewise, many of us, you included, have beliefs which might otherwise be labeled intolerant when perceived by others.

It was Father McGuire who urged a heightened awareness of homosexuality among his aging flock, encouraging gays and lesbians to attend services and becoming a part of the congregation. It was he who initiated a process for old and young, straight and gay to work together to form a strong and viable church ommunity. That process may sometimes be slow and painful, but in the last year I have marvelled at the strides that have been made toward such integration. I have discovered a church where I feel welcomed. am a participant in the church community. And I am

Unlike the politically correct Dignity, some of us gay and lesbian Catholics who practice our faith and wor-ship at Most Holy Redeemer prefer to be accepted as human beings, and not because of our sexual orientation. Some of us even prefer to integrate into our church community by voicing our opinions in a democratic fashion at the Parish Council Meetings. And we welcome all who wish to join us in our goal of making Most Holy Redeemer a truly representative church

We still have much to learn about ourselves and our fellow parishioners at Most Holy Redeemer, but we've made a very important start, a start made possible through the impetus of Father McGuire. A start you

ED. NOTE: May I direct your attention to the Lutherans' response to Gay Christians reported on elsewhere in these pages. They seem to take people as they are, not separating them from what they pray with from what they do with their penises

Would that my intolerance tarnish the Father McGuires of the world. They are the oppressors of the flock - always have and always will be.

the Police Commission and one crowd pushes for candidate "X." another group lobbies for suspect "Y." and so forth. No job classification exists that the mayor as the runner and ruler of her administration must fill. As with any chief executive, it is her privilege to shuffle, create, vanish jobs, classifications, and personnel as best the CEO sees fit. Nardoza was a senior staffer at a sizable salary. Could be that CEO could use two junior staffers at this point at half the pay. Perhans there is someone on board who could take over the Gay liaison function. These are all in-house decisions, and we feel it would be butting into business which is not ours to dictate the job, the salary, the title, or worse yet, to get involved championing this candidate as opposed to that candidate.

It is Nardoza's function as Gay liaison that we all — including the mayor - should seek to preserve. We believe that the time has come when the function can be publicly identified, be given specific duties, proudly announced, not be shelved or sent to Siberia.

Right now Mayor Feinstein is numero uno, on top of the heap, without a major cloud in the sky. She is victorious, not because she won a prize but because she won two elections. The vast majority of Gay and Lesbian voters - like the rest of the citizenry - gave her that victory, that vote of confidence. The Gay problem, the Gay issue, the Gay constituency is not a thing one wins and walks away with the trophy. The Gay people will be on hand for the next four years.

Also at this juncture in his career, Peter Nardoza has earned a congratulation from the Gay community for the work he has done in its cause. He is also due gratitude from Dianne Feinstein for the work he has done in her behalf: his loyalty, his unflagging advancing of her interests and point of view, his quiet diplomacy.

Not the least of Dianne Feinstein's success with the Gay community these past four years has been the success of

Happy Holidays to the Gay Community of San Francisco

* As the holiday season draws near, now may be the appropriate time for us to take a few moments out to reflect upon our exceptional good fortune, good taste, and intelligence to be living in the greatest city in the world, our beloved San Francisco.

Could anyone envision a more ideal environ than one in which each person is encouraged to proudly proclaim his or her individuality; in which each community knows its identity and is justifiably proud of that knowledge; in which the fields of entertainment, sports, and even politics count among their memberships representatives of all the divergent groups that reside within the municipality; where mutual respect and love is more often a positive reality than an elusive goal?

The intention of these reflections is not to conjure up visions of some unattainable Utopian dream. Their intent is to emphasize the actuality in our time of certain heretofore only dreamed of ideals. Ideals tha were made into living realities not through antipathy and isolation, but through pain, pride, and unity.

Those of us fortunate enough to have lived in the phenomenon called San Francisco over the past score years are privileged indeed to have also witnessed the birthing of an infant culture. A culture which, though denied sustenance by some and subjected to violence by others, managed somehow to survive.

Though the continued health of our fragile vet determined culture was, and at times still is, seriously questioned, its future survival has become more assured by the continuing consolidation of many weak, unsure, fragments into one socially sound, economically strong, political powerful entity that is today called the Gay community of San Francisco.

A Leathery Attitude

* It seems to me, Mr. Lorch, that you have a singular provincial inability to see the difference between 'femme drag' and "leather drag," if you will, and thus you ignore a sizable and wonderful element of the gay community. You would be the first to yell if someone outside the gay community grossly overstereotyped a gay man or lesbian, so why the bigoted attitude towards leather? Perhaps you could read more carefully your recent (11/23) "Rivets" article. How about more positive coverage and comments from you on the "leather" that the majority of us leatherpeople know and enjoy as a healthy, fun outlet?

Thanks to Sid Apostopoulous for his letter stating

VD Clinic Needs Volunteers

* Once again City Clinic is asking for your help. Recently our Gay Volunteers have had a setback due to a loss of members. Since the volunteers are respon sible for the majority of City Clinic's outreach VD testing program, it has become very difficult to effecively offer testing with a limited number of volunteers.

We ask for your help in two specific areas, first by running an announcement that the volunteers are looking for qualified candidates to become volunteers and second, to run the dates, locations, etc., of where the volunteers will be for future VD testing.

We hope you'll support our volunteer program and agree that the outreach work the volunteers do is both an asset to our clinic and a service to the community. Thank you for your consideration and all the help you've personally given City Clinic in the past.

Dirty Castro & Safeway Straights

★ Last year I wrote a letter to the B.A.R. stating that the Castro area was getting many bums and riff-raff from other parts of the city and that something should be done about this problem before it gets worse. Apparently nothing has been done about this because I have noticed the influx of derelicts, the mentally disturbed, drug addicts, etc. into the Castro area. This is a shame. Castro is turning into another Tenderloin. I have a friend recently moved to S.F. who has also made a similar statement. The Castro has become really filthy since I moved here four years ago. And it's too bad because it's a nice area with the diverse shops, Castro Theatre, restaurants, bars. Something has got to be done about this grievous situation.

ALSO: Why aren't there more Gay people working at the illustrious Safeway and Cala Food Markets? If one will notice, all the employees at these places are one will notice, all the employees at these places are straight. While taking Gay money, they don't hire Gay people. Now I could be wrong, but... The Safeway should be boycotted. One goes in to shop and has to wait in line between 25 and 40 minutes to get out and at those prices, it's ridiculous.

Not Looking Bad

* Nove that Armistead Maupin has hung up the last Tales of the City, we have only your Letters column to hang up a lively mirror to the community. I get a kick out of everything from the Cons to The Banishment of Billy (admittedly unlovely) to the perils o Jose in the toils of Club Alice Toklas.

In reply to Sid Aposto-poulous' letter in your November 23rd issue, about your South of Market columnist Karl Stewart, it is true most guys on that turf would like to see more of Karl "in the skins" as he signs his column off - but Tom Rogers has seemed to repair that with his new in-depth reports. Nowadays, as you also point out, there have appeared a lot of cross-your heart harnesses as detachable as any drag and glitter To you both I'd like to point out that since the Life

Magazine article on The Tool Box in '63, this city has been a focus for rare and rowdy bikers - some of these even what Mr. A. protests: "rock stars, poets and other entertainers." Relocating on Folsom Street, The Miracle Mile, as Herb Caen dubbed it, has spawned a generation of artists and writers like North Beach pefore it. To this day they welcome any far-out sexuality, intellect, approach. This includes drag queens with Hell's Angels as well as punks and old-style crewcut bikers gunning their hogs.

A Halloween Horror

One month later I can bring myself to write about what happened to me after the Castro Halloween celebration on Saturday, October 29.

I peeled off the crowd at Market & Castro about 1 p.m. and went up 17th to Ord, made a right on Ord to Saturn Steps to go to my car parked at the top. I heard running feet behind me and stepped over to let them get by. They didn't; they got me, landing on my back and pinning me down on the steps above the first landing. The man on top of me said, "Hurry up. Look up the steps." There must have been a second one getting the money out of my wallet. Up the steps, it turned out later, were a man and woman walking two dogs,

The muggers had knocked off my glasses; by the time I put them on and turned around, they had vanished. The couple walking the dogs said they didn't turn the dogs loose because they were afraid of a lawsuit if the dogs hurt someone. They asked me why I hadn't hollered. I couldn't with my throat in the crook of some-

To save someone else from the same fate, I went back down to Castro to alert the police that muggers were lying in wait for solitary people. There were plenty of places to hide near the Saturn Steps. I approached a CUAV monitor who told me to go across to the Standard station where the police had set up a substation. The Standard dealer said there had been no police at his service station all evening. I went back to a second CUAV monitor who took me to the 18th Street intersection where there were police directing traffic. The first policewoman we approached just looked blank and went on controlling traffic. We went up to a policeman who was not really doing anything except observing the crowd. He acted puzzled then finally said he would summon a squad car so I could report what happened to me. He didn't know how long it would take the car to get to the intersection from Mission Station. My alarm was going to go off at 5:30 a.m. the next morning, so I went home without waiting.

I wasn't hurt and they left my wallet on the steps minus $21, but at least I didn't have to replace the driver's license and other ID. But I never could get it across that the muggers were probably lying in wait for someone else. Next week I heard two other friends untered three men on the stairs in the same time frame and felt they were unmolested because there were two of them.

My point is that neither CUAV monitors nor the police got the idea of saving someone else from a fate like mine, and I tried to get that across.

On Rape Verdict

* It is highly doubtful that there is a word around today to adequately express how I feel after reading the article in the B.A.R.'s November 23rd issue. The article was headed "Man Rapes Sailor; San Diegan Gets Enraged, shocked, bewildered, and just plain disgusted with our so-called "Justice System." These are just the feelings I can identify.

I am ashamed to be part of a society that calls itself civilized and allows such an injustice to occur. I was once proud to call myself an American.

What kind of justice is our leadership handing out, when a "man" can blame his diet and get a slap on the hand for murdering two city officials? And if that is not enough, this same "Justice System" would consider giving another man life in prison for rape?

Granted, rape can be very traumatic for its victim, but let's be real! Only a few years for the murder of two human beings? What about those victims?

I'm sure there are many people out there who would have trouble reaching climax under regular conditions, and this guy does it supposedly in fear of his life? Wow! I hope that one day these people who sit on their benches (not my first choice) will open their bigoted

More on Jim Ostlund

* I, like many of your readers, enjoy reading the letters column. I may or may not agree with the opinions expressed in this section. At the bottom line, I usually try to give the various authors their right to their opinions. In the case of "Post Mortem," I feel the urgent need to speak out and to tell what I personally know

To begin with. I worked for Jim almost three years at Castro Station. During this time, we developed an extremely close relationship as friends and as coworkers. It was my experience that if Jim was "guilty" (?) of any mistreatment of any of his fellow humans (employee or not) it was of and to himself. On more than one occasion, I witnessed him give to others to the point he had nothing left to give to himself in order to sustain his own well-being. The people that he gave to so generously were not always deserving author's opinion. I saw him give money to people that he knew he would not get it back and to employees that he knew were not doing a fair job in return and should never have had the courage to even ask for (much less receive) such a favor. When confronted with this issue, Jim refused to believe that he was being taken advantage of. The person (in Jim's mind) was a good person basically and had not intended to hurt him with their

To those of us who knew him, I ask them about the many years and hours upon hours he spent in the Court system making changes to better the conditions of the entire Gay community. Largely due to Jim was the idea of keeping bar employees and giving benefits such as paid insurance and paid vacations along with a 4-day ork week so as not to burn them out and hire nev help. He tried to give the bar business employees the respect that he felt they deserved instead of having the attitude that they were nothing more than thieves, had out of control egos, and were sluts behind the bar.

As far as Jim's use of drugs, he may have experimented with them to a degree, but I would like to know who hasn't, including, of course, the author of "Post Mortem." Most of Jim's health problem was from his chronic hepatitis. His liver was a constant source of poor health for him. Occasionally, desperation for other company and a little fun would drive him out of seclusion for a little partying. Some of the rest of us should

It is still beyond my comprehension why anyone who is in view of the general public must be singled out by a few who have nothing better to do than gossip about those people in order to make their own tired and unjustified lives more tolerable. Then, to make things more complicated, to attack the memory of the de-ceased. I find this totally intolerable. Jim's biggest goal was that he could share in one large, POSITIVE thought pattern with his fellow man. He believed that there was good in every man, woman, and child and

Radio Lives On

* Your article on the changing face of local gay media (Page 12, November 23) paints a rather bleak picture for gay radio in San Francisco.

We are very sorry at the loss of David Lamble's KGO broadcasts, but that does not leave San Francisco "gay radio" fans without gay radio here

KUSF (90.3 on FM) broadcasts NGN News beginning at 6:45 p.m. each Tuesday evening. This is a special 15-minute broadcast compiled from our newscasts all week.

Opera Tails

* Having come 7,000 miles across the Pacific to sample the delights of the SF Opera under the dreaded regime of "Big Mac," I can't imagine what's with your correspondent Harold Edmonds. One would think that Mac had conspired to insult you all by putting on Midsummer Marriage — and probably because it is different from any other opera ever written. Certainly I found it one of the half-dozen greatest productions I have seen - and I saw my first opera 50 years ago.

To suggest SF should never hear singers who are from the London Records stable is surely grotesque. However, "Big Mac" did something no one else did. After it had stood for 50 years, he corrected the misspelling of Dino Borgioli's name on the memorial plaque in the fover!

San Francisco, I love you and I love your opera Maybe I could even get to love Harold Edmonds. If you do print this letter, I may never see it, as by then I will be back in New Zealand.

'Village Voice' on Apuzzo

* The Village Voice's attack on Congressman Weiss and Ginny Apuzzo for "grandstanding" at this summer's congressional hearing on AIDS, reported in a recent B.A.R., is appalling to me as someone who attended the hearing Apuzzo was both eloquent and judicious in her denunciation of governmental inaction in the face of the AIDS epidemic.

In fact, having myself seen the foot-dragging and the pitifully inadequate sums of money made available to respected, compe tent researchers who spent months almsot begging for the money which would allow them to continue their work on this disease, I would characterize Apuzzo's testimony as remarkably restrained.

The best evidence of the accuracy of Apuzzo's testimony, however, does not come from those of us in the gay community who agree with her; it comes from the subsequent response of the federal government, which greatly increased AIDS funding and therefore made it possible to begin much of the work which people like Apuzzo had insisted needed to be done.

We have a lot of people in Congress and our community to thank for the fact that we are finally seeing some meaningful federal action on AIDS, and Congressman Weiss and Ginny Apuzzo are surely among

As for the author of the Village Voice article, I only wish that during all the time our people were dying while adequate epidemiological and other research funding did not come, she had devoted half as much time to pursuing the issue of the federal government's insufficient action as she did to smearing those who finally had an opportunity to say something publicly about it. Gay Labor Alliance Raises $1,000

AFL-CIO Given Honor for Help

by George Mendenhall

The newly formed Lesbian/Gay Labor Alliance raised $1,000 at a local fundraiser last Sunday at its first public function. The affair toasted the leadership of the AFL-CIO which unanimously endorsed national Gay rights legislation and called for more federal AIDS funding.

"We are a melting pot and Lesbians and Gay people are part of that," AFL-CIO vice president Tim Twomey told the assembled. Twomey was given a plaque recognizing his role in introducing the Gay rights resolution at a recent AFL-CIO

Mexico Rounds Up Suspected Gays

San Diego's Update Special to the Bay Area Reporter

Tijuana, Mexico - Homosexuals are no longer released from jails here by the simple procedure of paying their fine.

A new policy which applies only to persons believed to be homosexual requires that Gays stay in jail until they appear before a judge, who will then decide what is to be done.

Arrests of "obviously Gay" men on the street, a new policy of the recently appointed Ti-juana police chief, have begun.

Police have begun circulating petitions to businesses near one Tijuana's two Gay bars, the Noa-Noa, which have the business owners ask the police to shut down the Gay bar.

Gays after they see the judge is unknown. Police in Guadalajara and Mexico City have already used the "petition" approach as a way to close businesses opposed by the government, including all but one of Guadalajara's numerous Gay bars.

Police have not made attempts to arrest anyone inside Tijuana's Gay bars, at this time.

The no-jail-release policy was discovered recently by Emilio Velasquez, founder of FIGHT International Front for the Guarantee of Human Rights of l'ijuana), who, while driving by l'ijuana's jail, recognized four men being taken into the jail. He attempted to pay their fine or bail them out, but instead the

According to a spokesperson for Grupo Liberalista of Tijuana, the new police actions are part of Mexican President Miguel de la Madrid's campaign for "moral renewal," a pledge to end corruption in law enforcement and politics.

Madrid's campaign did begin with a reform of the feared Mexican Secret Police, but since then has focused on arrests of transients, a growing group due to unemployment; Gays; and prostitutes. Émotional anti-Gay articles have fired up public hatred in virtually all of Mexico's newspapers. The government of Mexico does not permit a free press. Tijuana's last independent newspaper was shut down by the government several years

Reportedly, a massive, largescale round-up of Gays in Mexico City's Zona Rosa has been underway for weeks. In Guadalajara Gavs were released after paying large fines for vague offenses. It is unknown now what is happening to those who are being arrested.

Lutherans Welcome Gays

Two Bay Area Lutheran congregations have extended an official hand of welcome to Gays. Responding to a national "Reconciled in Christ" program promoted by Lutherans Concerned, the Lutheran Gay caucus, the parish councils of St. Francis Lutheran Church of San Francisco and St. Paul's Lutheran Church of Oakland have approved an "affirmation of welcome" which states that "because Gay and Lesbian persons are often scorned by society and alienated from the church, we wish to make known our caring and concern."

"Gay and Lesbian people share with all others the worth that comes from being unique individuals created by God," the statement affirms, adding that "Gay and Lesbian people are welcome within the membership of this congregation upon making the same affirmation of faith that all other people make.'

Lutheran Affirmation of Welcome

As a community of the people of God, we are called to minister to all people in our world, knowing that the world is often an unloving place. Our world is a place of alienation and brokenness. Christ calls us to reconciliation and wholeness, and we are challenged by the Gospel to be agents of healing within our society.

We affirm with the apostle Paul that in Christ "there is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither slave nor free, there is neither male nor female" (Galatians 3:28). Christ has made us one. We acknowledge that this reconciliation extends also to those whose affectional orientation is toward a person of the same gender.

Because gay and lesbian persons are often scorned by society and alienated from the Church, we wish to make known our caring and concern. It is for that purpose that we affirm the

- that gay and lesbian people share with all others the worth that comes from being unique individuals created by God;
- that gay and lesbian people are welcome within the members. ship of this congregation upon making the same affirmation of faith that all other people make; and
- that as members of this congregation, gay and lesbian people are expected and encouraged to share in the sacramental and general life of our congregation

The above affirmation, or the equivalent attached statement, was approved by the Church Council of St. Francis Lutheran Church of San Francisco on October 12, 1983. In doing so we acknowledge our participation in Lutherans Concerned/North America's Reconciled-in-Christ project.

Gay American History Course

New York, NY - An ambitious reading, study, and discussion group on "Lesbian and Gay American History" is being organized by Jonathan Ned Katz, author of Gay American History: Lesbians and Gay Men in the USA and the recent Gay/Lesbian Almanac, it was announced last week.

The course fulfills the social service requirement of a Writerin-Residence grant recently awarded to Katz by the New York State Council on the Arts, and is being administered by the Fund for Human Dignity, the educational affiliate of the National Gay Task Force. The wide-ranging survey will cover Lesbian and Gay American history from the colonial era to present, and will stress problems in understanding the character of same-sex erotic and affectional relations under different social conditions.

No prior knowledge of Lesbian and Gay history is required, but Katz hopes that participants in the group will "read their brains out," and take an active part in discussion based on the readings.

AIDS — A Personal Exploration

Part V: Deaths in the Family

In this fifth and next-to-last segment, Hippler looks back on a spate of deaths in his own family – too much too soon — and how he dealt with it all.

t is horrible that people have to go through this. I know, I know. It's horrible that people have to face half the things which befall them. That Mom had a stroke at 57 years of age was horrible. It was horrible, too, that she had to face finding herself largely confined to a wheelchair or to the couch when she came home from the hospital that February. There was little in her experience to help her pre-pare for that situation. She knew no way to deal with it. And yet she either had to learn or to face a life of misery and self-pity, repeating to herself over and over, Why me? Why me?"

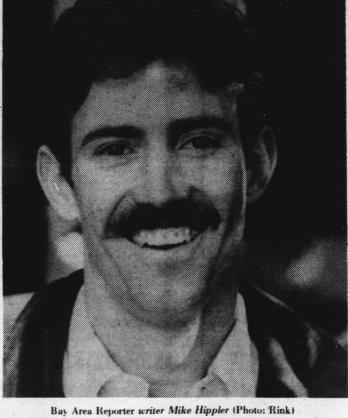

Mom's last day was one of the more difficult ones. She had been home about a month and was finding that life at home was in some ways more difficult than life in the hospital. She was learning to be a little more selfreliant, true, but still she had to endure our watching after her. She had to get up at six so that Dad could help her bathe and dress before leaving for work. She had to be ready to be placed on the couch at eight (within reach of the phone, the television, and her cigarettes and coffee, naturally) for at eight I left for work, and she would be alone until a day-nurse came an hour later. When I came home and the nurse left, she had to bear my pulling up her underwear for her every time she went to the bathroom (and she had to endure a cracked rib the one time she tried to do it herself and fell). She even had to pretend to enjoy my cooking.

Often she did all this willingly, but some days it was too much for her, and her last day was one of these. I had left my library job and was substitute teaching at the time, and as I had not gotten a call to teach that day, I was free to spend it with Mom. We spent the morning sitting in the sun together, she in her wheelchair and I in a lawnchair next to her, and at one point, when I looked up from the book I was reading, I noticed that she was crying silently. I tried to ignore it at first. It sounds harsh, I know, but Dad and I believed that if we pampered Mom too much, she would never learn to take care of herself. If we showed her how sorry we felt for her, she would only feel sorrier for herself. Of course we loved her, and we showed her that time and time again, but still, we wanted her to be tough. We wanted her to concentrate on beating this thing, So I let her cry — but not for long. I couldn't take it, so I reached out and said, "What's wrong,

"Everything," she replied.
"You and your father don't have time for me. Nobody cares about me. I'd be better off dead."

"You know that's not true," I replied, trying to appease her, but she would not be comforted. And so I wheeled her back inside, where she spent the rest of the day gloomily watching TV and complaining about a head-

That evening, after we had finished a game of bridge -Dad, Mom, my grandmother, and myself - 1 was getting ready for bed when I heard Dad scream from the bathroom, Mike, get in here quick!" I ran to see what was the matter and found my mother leaning against the bathroom wall, rapidly losing consciousness. I helped Dad to get her to bed and then held her hand as Dad called the doctor. The doctor wanted to know exactly what was wrong. Then he asked to speak to Mom. I didn't hear what he asked her, but her reply — the last thing I heard her say - was, "Sure I

Dad and I rushed Mom back down to Glendale Memorial in the back seat of the station wagon, and when we got to the hospital, the doctors told us what we already knew by then -Mom had suffered a second stroke. This one was severe, they explained, probably fatal. There was nothing to do but wait, so we waited. Twelve hours later, as Dad and I watched the activity on the graph monitoring her ital functions fade away to nothing, Mom died.

The dying. I try not to focus excessively on death. Like Patrick, who has the disease I write of, I try to concentrate on survival instead and to remember that AIDS and death are not synonymous. Ward 5B is not a terminal ward, after all. But the subject is hard to avoid — the mortality rate for people with AIDS is so high. Even the nurses who take care of the people with AIDS often refer to them as the dying, and every week, it seems, there is an article in the newspaper about someone else who has died. We struggle against the inevitable I constructed elaborate graveyards in the back yard for all our household pets, including dogs, parakeets, guinea pigs, and rab bits, as well as a few stray squirrels and songbirds. I even cher-ished childhood fantasies of my own death and spent countless hours planning my funeral and contemplating life in Heaven. I liked to imagine myself on a cloud high above that funeral, enjoying the spectacle immense-"He was such a good boy. Why did he have to die so young?" everyone would weep.

"I knew they'd be sorry," I would exult. "Let 'em suffer."

Later I progressed beyond romanticizing death and learned to joke about it. My family and I used to kid Mom by telling her that when she died, we were going to set her up in her casket at the funeral parlor, install a Chatty Cathy box, and instruct mourners to pull the string. Mom would then still be able to entertain her guests as she had in the past by repeating her "Michael, bring me my cigarettes," "Get 'em, Gators!" and First mistake I ever made. My family believed strongly that laughter helped to ease the pain of dying, and we even joked on the way to the hospital when my grandfather died during my senior year in high school. His death was the first I had to experience, except for that of my other grandfather when I was too young to care a great deal. His lifeless body was the first I

Grandma died a year before Mom did. Losing her to cancer was one of the hardest things Mom ever had to bear and may have helped to bring about her stroke, I believe. We all met in Atlanta for the funeral and drove to nearby Rockmart, Georgia, for the burial services. I don't remember much about either, except that I know l played some of Grandma's favorite hymns on the piano. Oh yes, and later, at a neighboring grave, I saw written in glitter under a blue plastic telephone in the middle of a floral wreath the words, "Jesus called, and he answered." I could only hope that that family had a sense of

When Mom died in March 1977, I took it matter-of-factly. Although the second stroke was unexpected, her lengthy illness had given us time to prepare for the possibility of her death. So I wrote withdrawn, sterile letters to everyone and flew with Dad to Florida for the funeral, carrying her ashes in a cardboard box at the bottom of a cheap straw shopping bag from Mexico. We buried her under the Spanish moss, palm trees, and sandspurs of her childhood, and Dad placed their wedding ring amidst the ashes. The engagement ring I kept for myself. "I'm so sorry," everyone said, "but it's probably better this way; don't you think? She led such an active life. She wouldn't have been happy as an invalid. Perhaps she wouldn't have been, but I couldn't agree that it was better for my mother to

Shortly after Dad died and soon after my 30th birthday, I made my first will. I think the will was as much a result of one too many nights on acid as it was a consequence of anything else, but whatever the reason, I figured that the way luck was running in my family. I didn't have any time to waste. So I put Bic ballpoint pen to college-ruled notebook paper and wrote a few brief paragraphs leaving everything to my two sisters. Then I added a six-page coda detailing scores of items I wanted my sisters to be sure to save, in cluding my journals, of course, a couple of unfinished novels, a signed copy of The Mayor of Castro Street (how could they live without it?), Mom's ring Grandma's china, broken glass from Tintern Abbey, even a box of stuffed animals that I keep on the stairs (the ones I didn't burn at the stake twenty years ago). I'm not sure if the will will hold up in court, although I did get an ex-boyfriend to witness it (which was fairly brazen of me, since I didn't leave him anything). But whether or not it is legal, at least now I feel that I have done my part to bring some order to my eventual end. I have tidied up my house.

don't always joke about death, you must understand. It's just that having lost both parents, three grandparents, and a few friends and acquaintances, I feel I am used to death now. It does not hold the horror for me that it does for so many of my friends these days. Occasionally I still rage, rage against the dving of the light, but more often than not, I shrug my shoulders and tell myself it's not that big a deal. What difference does it make to Mom and Dad now, after all? Sure, the survivors hurt, but that pain fades eventually, and it is inevitable in any case. So what difference will it make to me when my time comes? If my car sends me over a cliff someday, will I care that my apartment has no bay view or that I still haven't published in Harper's?

In some ways I even look forward to death as a rest, a release from care. It will be nice not to have to worry about the future anymore - about happiness and success, about ambition and fulfillment. It will be nice not to have to try so hard to find "meaning" in everything and to make every moment count. Toward the end of her life, I know my grandmother was ready to go, to lay down the "weary bur-den" of life. She couldn't wait to see Heaven, where she believed she would be reunited with her husband. Unfortunately, I don't share her beliefs about Heaven - that delightful fairyland where all will be just as we would like it to be — but that doesn't seem to matter a lot. The void doesn't frighten me - in

I, too, am ready to go. You will say, of course, that never having been in the position of someone who really is dying, I don't know what the hell I am talking about, and that it is an insult to people with AIDS to compare my thoughts about death with their struggle to live. I can only reply that you are probably right, but that I did find myself in that position for a few days this past spring when the skin troubles that I was havspite of it, there are times when ing got out of hand and my doctors biopsied a lesion on my arm for KS. Although they assured me that the results would almost certainly be negative, still I managed to convince myself that they would be otherwise. Yes, yes, it was dramatic, I know, but for a few short days, I fully expected to be told that I had AIDS, and I immediately assumed I would die, even though I recognized that all people with AIDS do not expire on the spot. The point is that rather than panic, I resigned myself and prayed, "Just please let me live until my picture appears in Numbers." At the same time, I called my friends John and Alex and instructed them that if the tests were positive and I did die within the week, they were to come over and clear out my paltry porno collection. Call me a closet queen if you will, but I didn't want my sisters to inherit

Christmas in Gayland The Upper Market — Ever More Splendid, Ever More Chic

by Bernard Spunberg

We screamed for a Christmas tree. "Mmhnnh," Father grunted. "Jewish children do not celebrate Christmas,' Mother translated, "and there is no such thing as a Chanukah Bush." Mother and Father never caved in to the positively Talmudic argument that a tree called a Chanukah Bush is a Chanukah Bush. After all, Chanukah Bush or no, we did celebrate the Festival of Lights beautifully with lots of good food, especially potato latkes (pancakes) with sour cream and apple sauce, presents, and eight days of lighting the menorah, the special Chanukah candelabra. So why did the kids want a tree? Because trees look and smell magical and because they mirror the color and excitement of the holiday season.

Mother and Father instilled a strong sense of culture and, though I can now have a tree if I want one, I don't. I'm too Jewish. But my Jewishness doesn't stop me from appreciating other people's Christmas trees, exchanging gifts, and participating in the holiday season to the hilt.

with all sorts of Christmassy sights and sounds. The Flower and Plant Market, on Duboce just below Market, has lots of candles, potpourri, azaleas, and poinsettias, but I like the live blue spruces and junipers. They are alreay decorated and are available in several sizes.

Is There Really a Christmas So/M? If There Is, It's a Leathery Season...

by Tom Rogers

Rumor has it that Santa Claus isn't coming this year. Last year they caught him laying a doll under the Christmas tree and sombody shot his root off. Happily, some personal investigation has proved that rumor to be unsubstantiated. This writer went directly to Neiman-Marcus the day after Thanksgiving and looked carefully at both Santa and his root. In spite of Herb Caen's assessment, both Santa and root look fabulous

The day after Thanksgiving was marked by unseasonably clear skies and the bright sunlight almost trumpeted this city's annual promenade around Union Square, where thousands thronged to indulge themselves with myriad material fantasies. They were given considerable help by the splendid window and floor displays at megaretailers' emporiums such as I. Magnin's, Saks, Neiman-Marcus, and Macy's, where the mannequins predictably out-dressed nine out of every ten patrons. If anyone in the promenade failed to succumb to the hypnosis induced by glitter and glamor, they had no defense wealth of this city's Victorian past a la Christmas. The ebullience of the season spirit thus projected to the crowds was also reflected by them, infusing the square with festive excitement. Thousands filed out of the square thus excited, making room for the stream of people still arriving. Those who'd already done the promenade fanned out into the area surrounding the square to shops and boutiques of lesser scale which became targets for their gift-shopping quests.

ised last week to support federal legislation to ban discrimination against Gays; unlike his chief rival, Ohio Senator John Glenn, who used the occasion of a San Francisco visit recently to announce that he would not support a national Gay rights bill. Mondale, who wouldn't comment directly on Glenn's Gay rights position, suggested that Glenn was wrong because "we're talking about elimination of discrimination, and I think that's a popular position in our country," adding that "I'm against discrimination on principle." Mondale's clear support of Gay rights not only hurt Glenn in California, but it probably inadvertently dilutes support for California's Alan Cranston, particularly from Gays and their supporters who had previously indicated support for Cranston because it is becoming increasingly obvious that Cranston's candidacy is really going noplace and Mondale appears

And for those planning on meeting White at the gates of Soledad on January 6, forget it. This writer has it on good source that he will in fact be transferred to another prison before January 6 for release. When asked about transferring White before his release, Department of Corrections spokesperson Phil Guthrie refused to comment except to say that he was "not ruling out or speculating" on the possibility. California law usually requires that a criminal be returned to the county in which he was convicted in order to report to parole authorities, but because of the notoriety and publicity that surround White, corrections officials have, of course, concluded that White would be in danger here. M. Marks Itemizes '83 Senate Work

State Senator Milton Marks this week released a list of his 1983 legislature efforts and accomplishments in behalf of the Gay community. With rumors continuing to circulate that Marks will be challenged by Lia Belli, wife of flamboyant attorney Melvin Belli, Marks has been moving to deflate the balloon before it overinflates.

Marks' opening claim was that "the 1983 legislative session has been a very encouraging one." In a bid to tie down Gay backing, Marks wrote, "Key bills supported by the Gay and Lesbian communities have either been enacted or are awaiting further legislative action when the Senate reconvenes." Marks has always enjoyed strong support among Gay voters and can be expected to conscientiously maintain that base. In 1980 he enjoyed the backing of both the Republican and Democratic parties in his State

Following the meeting the arrests at Collingwood Park stopped. In January Captain Don Taylor was replaced by the current Mission Station Captain, Vic Macia. Paul Seidler, the police liaison to the Gay community, pulled together a successful network of contacts to ease tension and build harmony within the community.

Captain Macia began a series of appearances at Gay community meetings. The first was a meeting last spring at the Alice ternally at Mission Station to change the direction of attitudes. Lesbian and Gay officers were given walking beats in the Mayor Dianne Feinstein focused attention on police relations at her monthly meetings with the Gay community. Police Commissioner Jo Daly said it is "amazing how many people broke their back" to make this work. "I'm proud of the Gay community and the police community for the work that has been done," she said. She credits much of the change to the efforts of the Community United Against Violence. Through many meetings they have totally changed the perspective of how police deal with Gays.

Last Halloween the big test came in the effectiveness of the new relationship. As praise flowed in, Jo Daly said the results were "overwhelmingly Last night Officer Williams and another former Mission Station officer, Darryl Solomon, appeared before the Police Commission on the charges resulting from violence last year at Mission Station. Both had been indicted by the grand jury for assault and malfeasance in office. The charges were leveled by District Attorney Arlo Smith. Smith had said last year that he was going to go after criminal violence in the police department. The complaints of the District Attorney against Williams and Solomon were sustained by the court.

In addition to the charges resulting from violence at Mission Station, Williams was also criminally charged in San Mateo County for selling drugs out of his home. A. White

The results are handsomely intriguing. Fifteen of Lambo's ripped paper collage portraits are currently on display at The Bear, 440 Castro Street, through December - Bette Davis, magnetic with hot pink eyes and purple and orange hair; Joan Craw-ford; an elusive Garbo in shades of grey and flesh, startlingly highlighted by streaks of a watermelon brightness; Harlow; and a splashy Carmen Miranda. Absorbing Evil

What will happen when Dan White is released from jail? Most people are curious, feeling suspense as the drama reaches the end of an act. Yet such calm feelings as these are exacerbated by both a grand calendar in public view, ticking off the days until White's release like a bomb in countdown, and by the frequent and sensational promptings of columnist Herb Caen, who urges foolish action in the guise of repeating "cute" jokes. Yes, what will happen when Dan White is released from jail? Or better yet, what should happen? Art Bierman has written a play which explores this question. Oh, Danny Boy, which opens at the Julian Theatre on December 9, tells the story of a man obsessed with seeking retribution for White's minor sentence. The man decides to kill Dan White, and his attempt at fulfilling his plan allows the play to explore the thin boundary between justice and revenge.

"I've written eleven versions of the play," author Bierman told the Bay Area Reporter, "and we've had five readings so that I could absorb the ideas of the play into action and confrontation. I didn't want to go over the same story we all know, but to air what's on our minds. Do Immaculately Conceived. Monica Palacios (l.) and Marga Gomez bring their Comedy Jamboree to the Intersection.

Carol Burnett Goes to Amelia's

Monica Palacios, a native of San Jose, describes herself as a young, attractive, moneysucking welfare recipient on her way to stardom through comedy and screenwriting. New Yorker Marga Gomez loves to laugh, serves on the board of directors of her own charity, and reads bilingual ballots in her spare time. To-gether they are The Gomez and Palacios Comedy Jamboree. Their satire and standup comedy has been developing a following within the Gay commnity, where their Wo-man's touch and Latin flavor add to a potent brew. This week they leave their accustomed haunts to perform in an unusual location — the Intersection, where they will present a show in honor of the Immaculate Conception.

"I've worked at the Intersection before," Marga Gomez revealed, "acting with the Nickelettes and Lilith. So I'm fond of it. Most of our audience, though, lives in the Mission, the Castro, or the Haight, and that's where they go out. So it's a challenge to appear across town. But of all the places in North Beach, it's the most promising. The Intersection is a community arts organization, and they have no attitude about booking Gay people.

"I have rejected the vapidity of decorative art," Andrew Toler said, "in favor of creative expression. This has resulted in paintings which render the most ignored and hideous objects of our world equal to its most revered and beautiful. Consequently, you cannot see them without seriously reconsidering what constitutes beauty itself within technology.

Opening Reception on Sunday, December 11, from 6 to 9 PM. Toler has exhibited at the CNA Gallery three times, as well as at The Stud, Echo Beach, and the Ambush. His Easter windows for I. Magnin in 1982 were a conspicuous paradox, facing Union Square. In two corporate shows, for Phillip Morris International and the local Pacific Gas and Electric, Toler presented his art to those most responsible for the technology which inspired the work.

"It seems to me," said the 29-year-old painter, "that there is only one reason why anyone would wish to look at my pictures, rather than others, and that has to do with perspective. So much of painting views the world as a cone, a mere funnel, leading to a specific, ever vanishing point. The direction of this view of the world, of course, is always the same, from greatest to smallest. This seems simple to me, if not false. I paint in terms of an ever-widening field of vision, from smallest to greatest, from plane to plane of endlessness. And so if this is interesting, it is perhaps the reason one should see my pictures."

ail Wilson opened her new show at the Plush Room last Monday and sweet pleasure it was to hear that copper and silk voice again. Start-ling pleasure to see her, too, her crimson hair matching a crimson/leopard gown. The Forbidden Broadway backdrop of shredded garbage bags wasn't glamorous, but the slit up the side of Gail's dress proved distracting and revealed enough of Gail to win her the Thighs Queen crown. Distracting, too, is her new songbag. It's heavy on fun and novelty tunes, and I wouldn't mind more meat and potatoes. High point was a love-"Bridge Over Troubled Waters" — what a magnificent song — closely followed by Duke Ellington's "In My Solitude" and the contemporary ballad "Lie To Me." "The Ballad of Lucy Jordan" has a rather simplistic tune to sustain a slow tempo throughout, but revealed more of its strange story than Marianne Faithful's uptempo version.

Novelty? Of course - and a little trash, too. Gail premiered her original Rap number, "Queen of the Fire Station," which pleads, "Fireman, let me slide down your pole." She dodged through "Baby You Can Drive My Car" and dug into '16 Tons" ("do you know what it's like working on your knees in a mine all day? It's hell on

TALES OF TESSITURA

Pump That Puccini

GEORGE HEYMONT

A new face recently made a brief, but stunning debut at the City Athletic Club. Leanly built, his well-chiseled torso gleaming with sweat, I first laid eyes on him as he was doing curls with a fierce determination that bordered on the obsessive. His arms boasted magnificent biceps. A red handkerchief tied around his head highlighted his dark, seductively masculine features. His thighs could have been the breakfast of champions.

At first glance he seemed to be a Madison Avenue fantasy come to life, looking as if he had perfected every pose in Charles Hix's Working Out. For all I knew he could have sprung from its pages like Aphrodite in butch gym drag. Then, one by one, his friends started to arrive at the gym and the most remarkable metamorphosis took place before my astonished eyes.

How so? With the arrival of each gym buddy this vision of sculpted masculinity shattered, the mirror cracked and the hero in front of me was transformed into a Gay Valley Girl. It's an old and familiar story and yet the fantasy, expectations, and power of this man's pump paralleled my emotions while attending two Puccini operas this season. One performance left me with the equivalent of a workout high as blood rushed wildly through my veins, pushing me to a musical climax. The other performance left me wondering whether the quest for muscle pudding was in

First Blush of Love. Des Grieux (Ermanno Mauro) and Manon (Mirella Freni) in a tender moment from Act I of Puccini's Manon Lescaut.

DENSE PACK DIVA

While many stayed at home to cream over Eva Marton's rendition of "In Questa Reggia" (which opened the Met's televised Gala Centennial celebration) even the mighty Marton would have been humbled by the sounds across the plaza that afternoon. At the New York City Opera soprano Linda Kelm and tenor Jon Frederic West were having a good, old-fashioned Nilsson and Corellistyle shouting match in Puc-cini's Turandot which, had the theatre not been soundproofed, could probably have been heard in the rambles of Central Park.

If possible, Miss Kelm (who appeared as the icy princess in 1982) seems to have grown in both size and voice. She colors her singing far more effectively than Marton and, standing two steps above a tenor half her size. looks infinitely more threatening. With a voice that can easily peel the plaster off the State Theatre's new proscenium, Kelm knows when to stoke her engines and, as the saying goes, let 'er rip! She did so that afternoon with rather awesome results.

With his powerful top range, Mr. West matched her note for note, turning the performance into a well-balanced game of one-upmanship which excited the audience no end. The smooth artistry of Pamela Myers (who sang a most seductive Liu) was almost lost in the deafening roar. Christopher Keene's conducting began tightly, but tended to meander here and there, missing the maximum orchestral power to be found in Puccini's score.

This production, directed and choreographed by Jack Eddle-man and designed by Beni Montresor, sported two novelties. The first was the extensive acrobatics (modeled after techniques used at the Peking Opera) which added some maor thrills to Act I's mighty choral scenes. The second was the use of the original Alfano ending to Puccini's opera, which added another six minutes of music to the score. The latter change broadens the scope of the Turandot/Calaf Act III duet and magnifies the effect of the final chorus by adding in sustained high notes for the two leads. If you're one of those opera queens who likes to jerk off over Puccini's big, throbbing guns, this version is definitely

STRETCH AND YAWN EXERCISES

With all that exotic muscle and beef in Turandot, Puccini's Manon Lescaut seems quite anemic in comparison. Indeed, this opera doesn't really get it ass in gear until the final act. Perhaps, if Manon knew she were heading for Louisiana, she might have sailed across the Atlantic with a banjo on her knee. It could have livened things up. Alas, our heroine received little help from Grischa Asagaroff, who directed the San Francisco Opera's production this fall with alternate doses of heavy-handedness and ennui.

Because Manon Lescaut takes so long to get moving, it needs every bit of help it can get. In some moments, particularly the first encounter between Manon and Des Grieux, Asagaroff lent several distinctive touches to the action. In others (particularly his lackluster staging of Act II) the dramatic momentum died in its tracks. Act III's March of the Whores was pathetically comical: overcooked ham at its worst.

Allen Charles Klein's sets (borrowed from the Miami Opera) were serviceable. The (Continued on page 27)

magazine with the infelicitous title Soup (translation in A process) is one of the most felicitous publishing events of the year. I had a dream the night before I began writing this review in which I was in a Safeway check-out line. There were magazines everywhere, none of them The National Enquirer or Cosmopolitan. The people around me were reading flawlessly bound books from small presses and little reviews published privately. In this dream two women in back of me were loudly discussing the virtues of Soup. One woman looked like a pound of potatoes, the other looked like two pounds of potatoes. I tuned is better. It is startling. It is translation, biography, criticism, and poetry simultaneously. Gluck's unique sense of nar-rative, Boone's feeling for the personal voice in prose - oh, it's

Two Pounds: Well, of course, it's lovely, but we knew about Boone and Gluck and Fontaine. Who ever heard of Rene Crevel before? And, my dear, we are dealing here with a major satirist. Listen to this: "Mme. Dumont-Dufour loves pomp and ceremony; she never permits herself to be imposed upon save by the most exalted things . . . Mme. Dumont-Dufour prefers the majesty of ostrich plumes to the hue of birds of paradise." Isn't that marvelous!

One: What's marvelous is that there are two remarkable satires in Soup. The piece by Fernando Alegria called "The Goose Step" is a hysterically seditious laugh at the military Listen: "The Parade must begin with an aerial march of messenger pigeons, of all colors . . . and of every species . . . Some sixty thousand, he said. It was argued that, even though they were picturesque and lifted the national spirit, sixty thousand pigeons was a lot of pigeons.'

Two: Oh darling, look at what I turned to by chance. It's from an essay called "The Artist in the Future State" by Erich Muhsam. "I consider the community of consumption to be just as desirable as the community of production."

One: More desirable, my

Two: I'll tell you the truth. I never really believed that Rimbaud was a poet until I saw Felice Picano's adaptation of 'Parade." Take this description of a Gay bar: "Walls of men facing men like walls." Or: "Pupils dilated from something they're on, hallucinating, playing with their crotches to show it hard, sweat and tears from their laughter ruining their Aramis.' Oh darling, it's your turn at the cashier. Do you want to stop at the Pilsner after this? This translation of Laure by Kathy Acker is quite disturbing in

So realistic was this dream that the next day in line at Safeway I asked the woman behind me what she thought of La Fontaine. She replied that she'd seen her perform with Alfred Lunt and Noel Coward. The National Enquirer screamed its banner headline: "Carson's Wife Rejects Settlement — $17 Million Not Enough." I agree.

Soup (translation in process) is the third of a projected quartet of Soup magazines, and though the first was acceptable (the best work in it was the exquisite photographs of a woman and pollarded sycamore trees by Ginny Lloyd), and the second distinguished by writings of Boone, Gluck, and Acker, Soup 3 is the best. The translators are mostly young and from the Bay Area; the translatees are from all over Europe and Latin America, ranging from Homer and Sappho (called by the Greeks "The Poet" and "The Poetess") to Rilke and Brecht. The famous are on both sides of the translations - Picano adapts Rimbaud, McClure redoes Aeschylus - but it is the new names that are really exciting, as discoveries always are. Crevel, Muhsam, and Laure are major artists previously unknown to Americans. The name of Rene Crevel was once linked with Gide and Malraux, yet La Mort Difficile, his 1926 satirical masterpiece, had remained inaccessible to English-speaking readers until David Rattray's version in Soup 3. Rattray's work is exceptional. It is a

Translations at their worst make a hodgepodge of the origi-nal, and at their best often only make sense of what was music. The sense of literature is in the words, but the feeling of literature is in the words and the sound. The best publishers and translators provide the original text on a facing page so that the reader can see exactly what the translator cannot do. Soup 3's back cover offers an example of the problems inherent in translation in a short poem by Ernesto Cardenal called "In Managua at Midnight," printed in Span-ish and English. Juan Herrera's translation of one line, "and suddenly I asked myself," has rhythm and alliteration, but it is not the same music as "y de pronto me pregunto.

Given the difficulty of the art, how did so many remarkable translations end up in one 72-page magazine? Obviously. you first have to have good writers. "I followed the advice that Ezra Pound gave Robert Creeley when he started a magazine and that was start with a core group of writers whom you really like and are willing to do anything they want to do," Ab-bott told me. "Let them be 50 to 75% of your magazine so that people will know why they're going back to this magazine. It has Gluck, Boone, and Acker have given identity to Soup 2 and Soup 3, but they are not 50% of the latter. It is fidelity to a concept, not to any individual writer, that sets Soup 3 apart. 'One consistent recommendation," Abbott wrote in the introduction to Soup 2, "Soup should clarify its focus." The concept that gives Soup 3 such sharp focus is called detournement, which sees not transliteration but alternation as the job of the translator. "The point," Abbott writes, "isn't whether translation alters a work, but to what purpose." Kathy Acker is outspoken: "I wish merely to put on record my utter disgust with the belief in literalism." Soup 3 offers the reader a perfect example of detournement at work in a short poem by Catullus. 'Amabo, mea dulcis Ipsithilla. The Latin poem is given, then a

Girl Groups: The Story of a Sound MGM/UA Home Video 65 minutes, $59.95

Created specifically for the home video market, this original docu-music production brings back with reverent nostalgia the heyday of the Girl Groups. Using rare TV kinescopes and film clips from the late 50's and early 60's, the producers (who assembled the popular Compleat Beatles videotape previously) offer an entertaining, if too uncohesive and short, overview of a sound that captured our imaginations for a decade. It was only the force of the Beatles-led British invasion that successfully ended the girl-group era.

Groups like the Ronnettes, The Crystals, The Shirelles, The Supremes, Martha and the Vandellas, and The Shangri-Las were mostly black (or at least

> Yet somehow, by concentrating the tape to just 65 minutes, much of the material is too superficial for us to learn much more than the music itself reveals. Fortunately, many of the performance clips have not been cut, and we get total songs from "Will You Love Me Tomorrow" and "Be My Baby" to "Baby Love" and "Chapel of Love."

MICHAEL LASKY

Flashdance Paramount Home Video 95 minutes, $39.95

The big complaint most critics had with Flashdance originally was that it resembled in content and form a long MTV video. True, the flimsy story of Jennifer Beals, welder by day, dancer by night, was as vapid and predictable as they come. But the dance numbers are sensational and the music in stereo is, for its genre, dynamic. And since the film was made with video in mind, it works surprisingly well on TV. Flashdance is pure fun fluff, but its sheer mindless entertainment makes it easy to view repeatedly.

Cruise to Lose

Cruise to Win by Lenny Giteck Pantera Press; $10.95, paper

by Paul Reed

ometimes on Saturday night go out to the bars usually South of Market and meet friends and acquaintances, always keeping an eye out for a new face that might interest me. I go home satisfied, content in an evening spent in simple enjoyment. Sometimes on Saturday night

I go out to the same places and see no one I know. I try to cruise, try to meet new people, but for some reason, it seems nobody notices me, no one will even glance in my direction; I seem invisible. And so I return home, sad, lonely, perhaps a little teary-eyed about it all.

What's going on here? It's a very big question, in fact. It is difficult to find and keep good friends (let alone lovers) in a city - so much tension, so much pretension. But it has to be done, and one of the traditional methods of finding friends is by going out to the bars and

And so I picked up a copy of Lenny Giteck's Cruise to Win, hoping to shed light on my perennial problem: how not to spend my time in bars feeling like the creature from the black lagoon. I wanted this book to help me, I really did. I had high expectations that here I would find some answers to the puzzle of cruising, of meeting people in the big, bad city.

I found some answers in the book; in some ways it was quite helpful — if only to let me know that I am not the only man with such troubles. But I also found something quite disturbing in the book, a couple of underlying assumptions that make the whole book completely unsatisfying.

To get right to the point: Cruise to Win failed me in that it did not answer my questions as I had hoped. But it succeeded in answering my questions by awakening me to the defunct set of premises within which I was asking my questions.

If the AIDS crisis hadn't rendered the activity of "cruising" itself completely obsolete, time surely would have done so, for 'cruising" was already out of date long ago. "Cruising" belongs to another era, a time when homosexually-inclined men were forced - by lack of positive alternatives - to generate a system of behavioral cues which has as its central feature a deep and fearful

A brief meeting of the eyes; a turning away; a second meeting of the eyes; advance and retreat. Caution, discretion, uncertainty, hope: these are the ingredients of the act of cruising, and they belong to a time when men could not be honest and open about their feelings.

This is not the book we need anymore. We need a book called Dropping Attitude," or, more precisely: "How You Can Take Advantage of the Liberation We Enjoy to Free Yourself of Attitude and Be Nice to One Another in Daily Life." All the "Gay liberation" work of the last twenty years did not have as its end goal the tenets of Cruise to Win. Gay men have been trying to free themselves of the bondage of dark, unfriendly bars as the only route by which to meet other Gay men. Yet Cruise to Win does not address this problem. It perpetuates it.

What the men in the Gay community need now (more than ever) is a lesson in calming down, in learning to treat each other in a gentler, more friendly way - not guidance in how to succeed within a system that is based on premises of advance and retreat, acceptance and rejection, success and failure, winning and losing, dominance and submission, power and weakness, possession and destruc-

And so, the book fails. It is a lesson in the wrong direction. But beyond this is another troubling failure of the book. Assuming for the purpose of argument that one accepts and utilizes the book, what happens when it works? I go to a bar, use the book's advice to successfully cruise someone. What now? What, pray tell, do I do with this stranger at midnight in the era of AIDS?

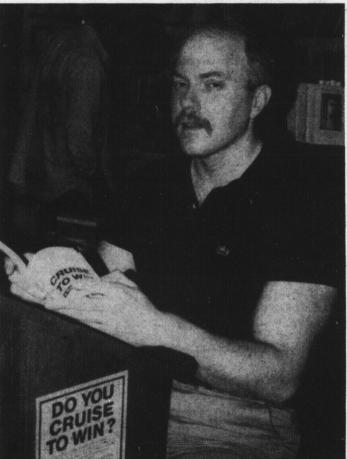

The health crisis has made cruising into something of a dinosaur, because the end goal of cruising is now completely out of the question. One can no longer afford the luxury of trial and error sex.

Well, how about friendship? Does cruising have to infer sex and only sex? I think it does. I don't think people make only "friends" in a dark, noisy bar. One may go to the bar with friends, but the obsolete impulse (of meeting a new sexual partner) is still there. Why else is the bar so dark, the air so heavy, the sound so loud, the entire atmosphere given over to seduction?

Lastly, the book even looks like it belongs to another era. it is shamefully cheap - a pulp paperback similar in material and design to those silly porn novels still found in dirty bookstores. The cover is a travesty of book design, and the price ($10.95 for 250 pages in paperback!) is disgraceful, breaking all acceptable pricing formulae in the publishing industry.

Now, to be fair: my anger about the basic assumptions of Cruise to Win has obscured the fact that it is well written. Lenny Giteck (an Advocate columnist) s concise and easy to read. In fact, this review bears no ill will to Mr. Giteck, who has artfully crafted the book; it is the underlying assumption that is wrong-

Many of the comments by osychologists and others quoted n the book are insightful and human. But, at $10.95, they are best read in the bookstore. Even given these good points, however, I still can't see the utility of — as I wrote earlier — a lesson in the wrong direction.

Mirrors for Straight and Gay Three Plays for A Gay Theater and Three Essays by Richard Hall

Grey Fox Press; $6.95, paper

by Frank J. Howell

ichard Hall, who was until recently known chiefly for is book reviews and articles for The Advocate, has collected three plays and some of his essays into one provocative

Gay Theater has emerged only in recent years and has struggled like a brawling infant for some sort of respectability. As Hall points out, Gays are usually forced to see themselves portrayed through the eyes of those who do not approve of our unique lifestyles.

Homosexual drama was born in crude backroom areas and church basements. Gradually it has forced its lusty head up through the cracks in the social fabric until the Gay play Torch Song Trilogy can land on Broadway and the musical La Cage aux Folles can be mass marketed. Straight society must now accept us on our own peculiar terms. Boys in the Band is ancient history.

Of the three plays presented here, I found only one a disappointment, Happy Birthday, Daddy. Daddy attempts to explore the problems of the Gay parent. Nick has a lover, Deke, and a fifteen year old son, Joey, who lives with his former wife, Jean. Nick has attempted to reach out to Joey, but the boy rejects his Gay ways and wants about two jocks who fall for each other. Martin Corelli has written the screenplay but Parker Mur-doch, who acts as the agent for Alex, is quietly working to sabotage the project. She is homophobic but has a lover, Mary Jo Finley. The play details the struggle to complete the movie against heavy odds. The ending is quite moving.

Nick to return to Jean. The focal point of dramatic conflict is a birthday party given for Nick. This certainly provides all the

Prisoner of Love is probably the most satisfying of the three and is based on Hall's own short

If we are shown as "gay" only in the most generalized and antiseptic way, thus giving middle-class audiences the chance to feel both broadminded and superior, then such plays are bearing false witness to our lives. We are being locked in a transparent closet in which our Gayness is acknowledged but the details of our feeling, thinking, loving, and hating are kept hidden. The pleasant fiction is maintained that Gay people are simply straight people with a taste for variant sex, that our unique behavioral patterns, deriving from sexual choice, do not exist.

- Richard Hall, Three Essays

ingredients for an insightful sparring match between Gays and straights who are hacking out a peace treaty with each other, but Hall fails to deal with the problem. At the conclusion, nothing has changed. No tensions are resolved, the people are still set against each other and the audience is left hanging.

Love Match presents a view of Hollywood attempting to jump out of its own closet. At last Tinseltown confronts a positive Gay film. Alex Cameron, macho superstar, attempts to produce Love Match, a sports story story. The setting is Puerto Rico. Jackson has invited Martin, a friend from New York, to visit him at his home during vacation. Martin is intensely idealistic and rather unrealistic about relationships between Third World people and Americans.

Jackson introduces him to a young, handsome Puerto Rican, Armando, who is an opportunistic hustler. Jackson pays Armando to befriend and bed Martin. He wants Martin to really enjoy his vacation. But his friend from New York is not aware of this arrangement and assumes that his friendship with Armando is quite genuine. All the while he spouts rhetoric about the exploitation of the natives by the United States without realizing that one hand washes the other. Armando smiles through all this and says that he was trying to keep everyone happy.

The three essays are "The Elements of Gay Theater," "Gay Theater: Notes From A Diary, and "The Transparent Closet: Gay Theater for Straight Audiences." Hall warns us that an authentic Gay voice must be developed in drama and we must not allow ourselves to be seduced by the oversimplified demands of commercial theater.

I've always enjoyed following the career of Richard Hall. He continues to develop in promising directions when writing in any media.

An argument could be made that her sexual preference is not vital to the telling of how she came to be a humane doctor, but an argument could also be made that her book would sell better if she did not upset the sensibilities of her heterosexual readers.

B. R. Burg thinks he knows. but certainly not for sure. Burg, who is director of the Honors Program at Arizona State University, has structured his study of buccaneer ways around a comparison of contemporary Gays with our crothers of the 17th and 18th century. This is a slippery play with facts and events. The Gay historian can easily fall into a conceptual quicksand gilded with the promise of facile discovery. he tragedy of Oscar Wilde continues to haunt us through the years. Much of recent Gay chronology utilizes his downfall as a touchstone of progress. We hear about how the sexual revolution has advanced or declined since Oscar's day. Books and plays about him continue to pour forth. As the author has him say, "I have become a problem in modern ethics.

Peter Ackroyd writes brilliantly, as though he were Wilde in the final months of life. He has a compelling and eloquent wit that closely follows the style of the mad Irishman. We believe we are reading Wilde.

Burg presents some intriguing speculations and sidelights about the sea rovers of this swashbuckling era, but they can only remain just that. The evidence is long gone. But the fantasy about Captain Kidd and his lusty men will linger forever in many a night dream.

But the major thrust of the story is simply flashbacks about Wilde's life which we have already heard numerous times his successes, his plays, the scandal, the arrest and imprisonment. So why take the reader on yet another tour of hallowed Victorian ground?

The homosexual aspects of Oscar's lifestyle are frankly dealt with and we are made well aware that he did love to play around with lower class boys. In fact, it has often been suggested that daring to descend into an inferior status group was the authentic origin of his vanquish-_ittle-known facts about his early life are explored. According to Ackroyd, Wilde was not widely admired in his school days. He functioned as a loner. It is also suggested that he may have been an illegitimate child.

Ackroyd's imitations of Wildeisms are fairly successful:

"Society frightens me, but litude disturbs me more.

Ackroyd glides uncomfortably close to the hellish truth when he has his Oscar explain, "I was playing with fire, but it is the prettiest thing in the world to team achieved a seasonal first on 11/30 by bowling a game 100 pins over his average, thereby meriting the coveted ABC Century Club patch. John's dedication and skill have paid off in a grand fashion, and the league is very proud of him.

Some other aspects of league accomplishments are not quite so impressive. For instance, although the number of 200+ games bowled this season is up to par, there have been only two 600+ series realized as of 11/30, and both of these were bowled by members of the same team, The Pilsner Pot Lickers. Another aspect that questions our league's competence on the lanes is the fact that not one team can boast that all of its members have bowled a 200+ game. (Although the Pilsner 4 can take pride in the fact that four out of five of its team members have realized this distinction.)

In the midst of this discouraging situation, however, 12

While the name of Andres Colon is conspicuously absent from this list, his lover, Allan Winkle, protected the family record by stepping into the breach and bowling two beautiful games. Way to go, Allan! * * *

Dynamic Russ Culver of the Animals team informed me that the Park Bowl team may not be aware of how close it came to staying in 4th position on 11/30. It seems that he had made up his mind to bowl an 800+ series and, had he not incapacitated himself for bowling that evening by slamming the car door on his

by Hugh Murray

In 1917 Lenin's Communist Party abolished the anti-Gay laws which had existed in Imperial Russia. In 1934, reversing Lenin, Stalin reimposed the oppressive anti-Gay legislation which is still enforced in the Soviet Union to this day. Prejudice against Gays is strong, and erroneous stereotypes about Gays abound.

On Sunday morning, November 20, 1983, the Ramblers Soccer Club of New York City struck a blow for Gay rights against the Soviets. The Ramblers, the predominantly Gay soccer team, played the Soviet team in the United Nations League, of which both teams are members. The Soviet team is composed chiefly of UN personnel; the Ramblers are Gays and a few straights of diverse backgrounds and origins. It was a rough game. Within the first 5 minutes both a Rambler player and the Soviet goalie were ejected from the game for fouling each other. A few minutes later, the referee sent another Rambler off the field. After that, there were fewer fouls and both teams then spent more time in good sportsmanship and displaying soccer

The Ramblers scored early through their team captain, Leslie Randolph. Shortly thereafter, another Rambler, Doug. also scored. But the Soviets, who had 10 men on the field to the Ramblers' 9 due to the ejections, scored also, so at the half the Ramblers led by a slim 2-1.

In the second half the Ramblers' Hugo dribbled through a number of Soviet defenders to provide a 3rd goal for the Rambler team. But the Soviets turned a corner kick into another goal and the score was 3-2 Ramblers with 15 min-utes to play. Both sides had more opportunities to score, but when the whistle blew, the mosty Gay Ramblers had defeated the Soviets 3-2.

Perhaps the Soviets should revise their stereotypes of Gays. Certainly, the Soviets should revise their laws. If anyone travels to New York and wants to kick the ball around with the Ramblers, call Jim, 874-3834.

rom behind me came a conspiratorial whisper. "Real leathermen don't do that." I turned away from a group of Clubbers doing "The Duck Dance" to see a leering grin on the face of an acquaintance. My hand involuntarily went to the pocket where I keep my favorite quiche recipe. I pondered for a fleeting moment whether I should pull it out and hold it up to him a la Cross to Vampire. I decided not to panic. He could be kidding, pulling an attitude check. "Really?" I mocked his leering grin. Apparently he'd just been kidding, for he laughed and walked away. I turned back to the Duck Dancers, who were achieving a fevered pleasure. I noticed that the part of the dance they liked best was when they wiggled their asses, simultaneously squatting. Most of them exhibited a little self-consciousness about wiggling, causing them to laugh both at each other and at themselves.

Downstairs the electronic reader board behind the bar read "Welcome to FeBe's . . . Home of The Duck Dance." That should probably read "New World Home of The Duck Dance." FeBe's owner Don Geist brought it home from a vacation in Germany. It's a dance that legitimizes acting silly, biergarten style, by mocking some of the behavior of a duck. Ducks haven't yet accumulated sufficient political clout to protest this mockery, and when they do, The Duck Dance will be a, uh, dead duck. But by then Clubbers will have found another way to exhibit their inter/intra Upstairs, FeBe's manager, Randy Johnson, displayed his nearly inimitable bartending efficiency as he poured for a wall to wall crowd that was helping two popular men celebrate their fourth anniversary together. A spread of finger sandwiches and other food surrounded a centerpiece on the pool table. Anthony Vega (Barbary Coasters' President) and his lover Bob Rowbottom beamed. It was their anniversary party. There wasn't a club in town that went unrepresented. An exhibition of brotherhood between brotherhoods, not to mention regard for the clubs (MC's, for short) are manifest examples of leather brotherhood. As capable of isolating themselves for a Saturday night man-hunt as the "loner," most MC members band together to heighten their experiences of the leather lifestyle through perpetuated interpersonal relationships. "Loners" are capable of doing the same thing, but clubs working in concert as they do in this city function as the catalyst for roughly 80% of the leather community's active schedule. Most of us have been able to wipe off the grease and cum from our Saturday night experience, get back into our leathers, and go off to the Eagle patio to enjoy the hospitality of one or more clubs. (The nominal charge of a $6 entry fee for a club-sponsored beer bust barely covers the cost of beer and food. They're not there for profit. At the risk of gushing, they're there to promote brotherhood and to have fun. Annual mega-events, such as the SFGDI's A Date at Minsky's and the CMC Carnival, go a long way toward proving just how powerful the friendship between members of a club can be when wielded in coordinated Rivalry? Any rivalry between clubs is friendly and only surfaces during competition for a prize. The most recent example of that was the Cheaters' President of the Year election. That event had clubs each pushing for their own president in competi-tion for the honor. Clubbers wound up electing Bill Wood, who'd been running their council of clubs, The Forum.

Reaction to my comments about the Cheaters' election party serve to illustrate exactly what I'm identifying as brotherhood. The event amounted to an in-town run that could easily be-time I made what I thought was an astute observation, suggesting that the party seemed like a thinly veiled commentary on the things that can go wrong on club runs, sort of a lemon squeeze.

I was repeatedly and vociferously informed that my observations were wrong, with the exception of my remark that it was a fun-filled evening. People couldn't believe I hadn't smoked something before I wrote my comments, and that was the simplest among other justifiably testy reactions. Not only were the Cheaters upset, but the

Like the affable caterer Cameron Tanner. He's a strong supporter of clubs in San Francisco, in spite of the fact that he doesn't belong to one. During the guest shows of at least a couple of club events he's performed an amusing song and dance number called "The Vatican Rag," for which he dresses like a priest. When I greeted him at the Vega/Rowbottom anniversary party, he was standing with Remy, Secretary of The Forum and an officer of the Barbary Coasters, neither office a small community role. Remy was being a candidate for Empress that night - decked out. "Do you know Remy?" Cameron lifted Remy's hand to me and I gave it a squeeze. "Of course I know Remy." o bones about it - John Holmes has a big dick. Yet, despite the adage that anyone who says they aren't a size queen is a liar, I can hardly understand anyone being interested in this cock. to see a big dick? I think not. the camera work suitably reveal-There's more to the porn game than a mountainous member. The casts in even the worst Gay porn are generally attractive. Gay men have been bodybuilding, sunning, dancing. They're physical, healthy. Yet Mr. Holmes, starring in his first official Gay film, Private Plea-sures of John C. Holmes, has been beaten to within an inch of his life by the ugly stick. Although younger than those durable Gay stars Richard Locke and Casey Donovan, at 38 Holmes looks closer to the farther end of the Mame age continuum — "somewhere between 40 and death." His face fell several years ago, his pastey flesh hangs loosely on a frame that's a rude impersonation of a boat person, his stomach sags towards his groin like porridge sliding from a spoon, and as for the finer points like muscle tone, biceps, or those two items no apartment. Holmes stalks in, wearing a turban Aretha rejected, a scimitar, and his cock. The latter is as curved as the former, but you can tell them apart because the scimitar is stiff.

The plot finds the Sultan bored and needing to "test" his new slaves - meaning fuck them. Built into this plot is Holmes' callous disregard for these slaves, which hardly engages our empathy — unless rape fantasies turn you on.

Holmes forces his huge dick into three different assholes during the tedious course of the self-respecting fag would be film, and neither Joe Yale, Chris without, pecs, well, Mr. Holmes Burns, nor a third slave wince can quote Fats Waller: "I never at its size. Indeed, when Holmes holds still after mauling his meat into Burns' ass, the hungry little blonde is clearly impatient and twirls on that thing like a Cuisinart set not on whip, blend, or puree, but liquefy, honey, liquefy.

crewed. That's what you get by Private Pleasures of John C. Holmes. Divine parlayed vulgarity into a career; is a big dick sufficient enough to permit John Holmes to similarly promote ugliness into a virtue?

There's precious little art in PPofJCH, and the love displayed is that of Holmes for his paycheck. He has said he made this film because the money was right. He certainly didn't make it out of any sense of aesthetics. Aesthetics? I never heard of such a thing.

I've never seen Holmes' het porn, but if Private Pleasures is, as the star claims, "a step above any het film" he's made, those films must be a sorry lot.

gives Holmes as much head as possible. Yale seems to be enjoying himself. Burns takes over with obvious distaste. In a recent interview he told me he was thrilled to be making a film with Holmes. The original fuckbaby, Burns runs to size like a dog to a fire hydrant. It's clear, though, that while he enjoyed the fuck, he didn't care for Mr.

attractive Joe Yale (looking like Michael Smuin sans moustache)

It's easy to see why. A woman, poorly disguised in a glue-on beard, sits to Holmes' side, supposedly out of camera range. While Gay boys do their best on his appendage, Holmes can be seen talking to this chick, and his arm moves back and forth, as he apparently fondles

Burns spoke to me of his distaste and dishonor at Holmes' slipping it to this female fluffer to get hard before slipping it into Burns. "It was totally a grossout," Burns told me. "I told him he couldn't touch me until he washed himself off. So she stood out of range and played with herself to keep him hard."

Unfortunately, I cannot verify a statement attributed to Holmes in which he defended his need for a female fluffer. He needed assistance because Burns, the rumor has Holmes saying, was such a sloppy lay! The bottom line, though, is that Holmes simply isn't turned on by men. Several Gay stars -Jack Wrangler, George Payne, Paul Baressi - have demonstrated bisexual talents by making straight porn, and without fluffers. Holmes' need for one -especially one so visible - is an insult to the Gay audience. So some stupid producer, and Holmes as well, thought we'd rejoice to see his dick. Sorry, guys - if he's not bi he should stick to chicks. He's incapable of relating to Gays, which is why his treatment of them in Private Pleasures is so derogatory. After forcing his dick in and out of them - with an absolute lack of finesse or technique - he discards them. No, there's nothing of a different color.

Holmes displays other qualities that should veto him from further "Gay" films - a sexist attitude that reveals his disdain and lack of understanding of Gay sex. Forcing his dick on an all-too acquiescent ass, he growls, "Take it. How are you going to learn to be a man?'

If being a "man" is based on one's ability to put large objects up one's asshole, a lot of us -Holmes included — don't make the grade.

The movie is totally without foreplay. Holmes picks a slave "You're next" is about the only dialogue - finds the hole, plugs it, then pushes in and out. His spongy dick doesn't move much when he does, merely smashing up and stretching back. More than a minute of his sex routine is anti-erotic. Worse, it's not even funny. It's boring and then insulting. Holmes portrays only aggression as he pilevarious assholes. It's the exact sort of aggression that causes women to decry straight porn abusive, demeaning. If Gay sex is a contest to see how much an aggressor can shoehorn into an ass, this movie is its documentary. For those of us to whom sex is not a tale of domination followed by discard, Private Pleasues has nothing to offer beside this warped vision of sexuality. Entertaining? Arousing? I never heard of such a

Holmes is an opportunist, a working class boy who will pa-rade his cock for the highest bidder. I think it's time he got a job in a gas station somewhere. But I'm embarrassed for the Gay men in this film, who signed on not in need for money (Burns has made two dozen films in the last two months), but out of a desire to get fucked by the biggest dick in porno. They got it all right — literally and figura-

NGTF Meets with New CDC Director

Leaders of the National Gay Task Force met last week with the new Director of the Centers for Disease Control, Dr. James O. Mason. NGTF's Virginia M. Apuzzo described the session as "a good get-acquainted meeting that offered us an opportunity to introduce the Gay community to Dr. Mason, and to raise our interests and concerns about the work of the CDC." Joining Apuzzo and Mason were Dr. Edward N. Brandt, Assistant Secretary for Health; Shellie Lengel, director of PHS's Office of Public Affairs; and Jeff Levi, NGTF's Washington Representative.

Apuzzo and Levi stressed how important the work of the CDC is to the Gay and Lesbian community, particularly during the AIDS crisis. "We want to see good epidemiology and surveillance," Apuzzo said. "This can be achieved within the context of protection of confidentiality and sensitivity to the status of Gays and Lesbians in American society.'

Mason, who comes to the CDC after serving as Executive Director of the Utah Department of Health and as Commissioner of the Health Services Corporation of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints, acknowledged that his conservative background might be a cause for concern in the Gay/Lesbian community. "He pledged an openness to the community and said that he was fully committed to CDC's work on AIDS and other issues that directly affect us," noted

As a follow-up to NGTF's earlier meeting with Dr. Carolyne Davis, head of the Health Care Financing Administration that oversees Medicare and Medicaid - programs, Brandt confirmed that the Public Health Service was conducting an expedited review of experimental treatments of AIDS that could, with PHS approval, be funded under Medicare. A review of plasmaphoresis is currently underway, according to "The meeting represented a continuing dialogue with the Public Health Service," Apuzzo observed. "I think it was significant that Mason agreed to meet with us on his first day in office; I am looking forward to subsequent meetings once he has an opportunity to establish himself in the position of direc-

PRIVATE PLEASURES

The movie does have two subsidiary scenes with all-Gay sex. Winsome Johnny Dawes has a three-way that lacks interpersonal chemistry, but at least the guys are Gay. In another scene, Joe Yale comforts a slave who's been abused by "The Master." Yale fucks the slave with a fascinating quivering motion. He has some technique, and after watching Holmes misuse an ass, this iota of nuance is a relief.

Holmes refers to his dick in the film as "The Sword of Death." Dawes, sneaking away with two others for his threeway, says, "I've got my own Sword of Death." I do too, and I took it home where it wasn't subject to Private Pleasures' nonsense. I hope too many Gays haven't paid to see this decently made but insulting film. And I'd like an answer to my question. Will Gay men pay to see a big dick - no matter what it's at-

After seeing Holmes' lack of Gay understanding, it was interesting to read him complain about women who don't climax while filming het porn or have difficulty filming Lesbian scenes. Could you climax with John Holmes on top of you, lavishing affection and attention the way he does? Could you film a Lesbian sex scene if you weren't Lesbian? You could. but it wouldn't look like fun. Het porn's abuse of women is amazing — and here's its biggest star blaming that on women! And bringing the same attitudes to Gay porn. Private Pleasures should be avoided for the same reasons feminists decry straight Karr

PD Names Suspect in Twin Peaks Slaying

by George Mendenhall

Suspect: Timothy Reader.

White - Male - 23 - 130 pounds - brown hair and eyes. Home base: Nashville, Tennessee. Possible "Southern" accent. Using credit cards of Thomas Laskey, 42, who he allegedly murdered in San Francisco on November 23. Last known whereabouts: Reno, Nevada on November 24. Photo enclosed. Hair has since been cut to a shorter length. A warrant has been issued by the SFPD for murder, robbery, and auto theft. Suspect is sought by the Federal Bureau of Investigation for unlawful flight to avoid prosecution.

This description is similar to information being circulated in Northern California and across the country. Local homicide Inspectors Jeff Brosch and Ed Erdelatz have reason to believe that Timothy Reeder hog-tied and murdered Thomas Laskey in the victim's Twin Peaks apartment on November 23. Police entered the premises on Thanksgiving Day to discover the Napa Mental Hospital psy-chiatrist fully clothed on the floor. He had been strangled to death by bare hands. Foul play had been suspected by Laskey's employers when he had not reported to work.

Police investigators now have unraveled a possible sequence of events: Laskey met Reeder and brought him home. Reeder tied the victim's hands and feet together and strangled him. He took his wallet and his blue 1982 Honda. Driving in a storm, the killer went off the highway into a snowbank near the inland town of Sutter Springs. When he was assisted by Highway Patrol officers, Reeder told them he was "headed for Nevada City" and was sent on his way. Instead of Nevada City, the driver went to Reno, where he spent a night at the Midtown Lodge — using one of Laskey's credit cards. Reeder was fearful of detection because the Sutter Springs patrolmen had taken his driver's license information and the auto's license plate number. He ditched the car eight blocks from the lodge, where it was later found by police. The stolen auto report led to Reeder's detection. A national police tracer revealed that the suspect was from Nashville, where he had a minor police record. A police photo was obtained.

Oakland Gay/Lesbian activists were just a bit sur-

SEARCH CONTINUES Inspector Brosch states that he has no idea where Reeder is at this time nor is there any way to determine how much money he has with him. Laskey was somewhat of a recluse in his Gay lifestyle so none of his friends know if there was any excess money on the premises that could have been stolen. The suspect can continue to use the Laskey credit cards but eventually he could be apprehended for using them.

Many Bay Area Reporter readers contacted Inspector Brosch after the murder was reported in our lead story last week. The officer praised Bay Area Reporter for assisting in the inquiry and said the information obtained about Laskey and his lifestyle is assisting in the investigation. Brosch said that little had been known about the victim earlier except that "he kept to himself and would bring people to his apartment that he picked up on the streets, every once in awhile." He said two of Laskey's favorite Gay bars were the Alta Plaza and Pacific Exchange on upper Fillmore St.

The doctor entered psychiatry after his eyesight began to fail a few years ago and he could no longer operate (he was a surgeon). The native of Chicago had graduated from Loyola School of Medicine there in 1966. He moved to San Francisco in the 1970's.

DA Charges Gay Employment Service with Irregularities

No License, Soliciting Funds, Accepting Donations

Ken Kline has been indicted by the District Attorney's office for three misdemeanor counts relating to the operation of his Gay Employment Service.

The operation was charged with operating without the proper license, accepting donations without a police permit, and making claims that they had a permit to accept donations.

The Gay Employment Service has been a controversial business since its opening last spring. Staff have claimed that they were a "service" and not an "employment agency." They collected a donation and then gave information and assistance to people seeking employment. The "business" claimed that a third of the people using their service were finding employment. One of their biggest problems stemmed from the other two thirds who had paid their money and did not find work.

The Bay Area Reporter reported on the activity of the Gay Employment Service earlier this year after receiving a significant number of letters complaining of the business. Readers complained of how the agency performed in working with them to find a job.

District Attorney Arlo Smith has been highly critical of employment businesses who collect a fee in advance of a job. In the past three years he has closed down three employment organizations for violations of state employment agency laws.

For Ken Kline to qualify for the pre-trial diversion program the District Attorney is going to demand that he conform to the laws governing employment agencies in California.

Ken Kline and his attorney Susan Abbott chose not to comment to the Bay Area Reporter regarding the charges.
