STATE QUARANTINE PLAN PROPOSED

Includes Antibody Positive People; Calls for 'Isolation Facility'

by Brian Jones

The California Conference of Local Health Officers on Feb. 5 considered a plan to recommend quarantine of persons "suspected to be willingly spreading" AIDS. The target group includes healthy individuals who are antibody positive for the AIDS virus. The plan recommends that the state immediately begin planning a "strict isolation facility."

The quarantine plan calls on private doctors and public health officials to circumvent the AIDS testing confidentiality law. It

Feds May Urge Mandatory AIDS Tests

By Brian Jones

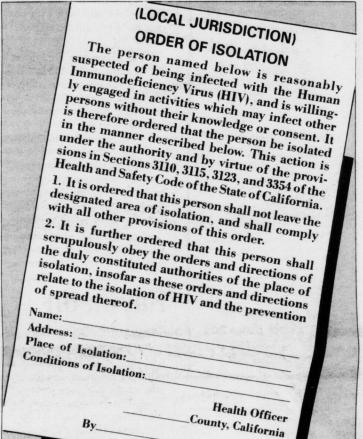

The federal Centers for Disease Control (CDC) last week called for comment on a proposal requiring AIDS antibody tests for all people entering hospitals. The CDC called for discussion on the proposal at a hearing in Atlanta on Feb. 24 and 25.

Meanwhile, a Bay Area company, American Bionetics of Emeryville, announced a new AIDS antibody test which it callurges doctors to report to local health authorities on individuals who are antibody positive. "Persons with asymptomatic infection could be reported as long as the results of an antibody test are not a part of the report," the plan states.

The San Francisco Department of Public Health opposes the plan. Said Associate Health Director Dr. Tom Peters, "This raises the spectre of many of the things we were fighting against in the LaRouche Initiative. We have serious concerns about the wording. It talks about people who are 'suspected' of engaging in highrisk behavior.

"Well, who is doing the suspecting? What does that mean?" Peters asked.

Despite opposition from health authorities in San Francisco and Los Angeles Counties, which have more than two-thirds of the state's AIDS cases, the plan is expected to pass.

"It sounds to me like there is a geat deal of enthusiasm in the rest of the state for the adoption of such a policy," Peters said.

The plan would encourage local health officers to use "orders of isolation" in some cases. But the plan is not binding upon local health authorities. Peters said the San Francisco Health Department does not intend to follow the quarantine guidelines.

"This plan is purely advisory, and Dr. Werdegar" — the San Francisco director of public health — "will not be pushed off his current course, which does not include this kind of strategy," Peters said.

The plan was written by Alameda County Health Officer Carl Smith. Alameda County has been in the forefront of pushing for use of quarantine powers for three years

Even though the plan would be advisory at the statewide level, the fact that it is being promoted by Alameda County officials indicates that Alameda County is moving toward actual use of quarantine powers.

United Way Boosts Gay Agency Grants

$50K Goes to 10 Groups More Issues Under Discussion

by Charles Linebarger

United Way of the Bay Area has set aside $50,000 as a special one-time grant to be split among ten gay organizations, Bay Area Reporter learned this week. In addition, the huge charity has agreed to create a board of directors-level committee to look at areas of particular concern to gays and lesbians.

Lazere said a special committee had been created at United Way which would include members of the charity's board of directors. "That's important because it's a direct pipeline to where the real decision-making goes on at United Way," said

The committee will also include representatives from the lesbian and gay community, he said. Its aim will be to address the concerns brought to United Way by the gay community. These issues include encouraging United Way to include a gay and lesbian presence in their fundraising pitches, and a pledge to end discrimination in employment and provision of services by United Way's member agencies. Some of these member agencies are the Boy Scouts and Big

"All United Way agencies should have a policy of nondiscrimination said Lazere. "United Way's group insurance trust should have coverage for domestic partners. We want lesbian and gay sensitivity training for United Way's staff and volunteers, as well as for their member agencies. The point is this boardlevel committee will be looking at all these issues."

The decision was announced in conjunction with the case of the estate of John E. Chadbourne against the Raytheon Company, Chadbourne, a gay man, had been diagnosed with AIDS in December, 1983. He died on Jan. 6, 1985, due to complications from AIDS.

Chadbourne had been a quality systems analyst for Raytheon, a large corporation which manufactures military hardware. He subsequently lost his job because he had AIDS. But according to Chris Redburn of the Employment Law Center, Raytheon "was hurt by fear" of AIDS.

"The sad thing about this case is that Raytheon had done research on AIDS," said Redburn. "The company knew that AIDS was not transmissable."

Leonard Graff, legal director for NGRA, said that the decision against Raytheon means that the company will have to turn $6,000 employer does not get off the get disability payments.

Graff said that the case "will

KQED Asks Change In MonitoRadio Hiring Policy

Criticizes Monitor for Religious Views in News; Offers Director Seat But No Gay Programs

by Charles Linebarger

Gay activists involved in the on-going discussions with public broadcaster KQED have decided that the success of their talks depends largely on whether the station continues to air the anti-gay radio news show, MonitoRadio.

KQED has promised that it would "make efforts aimed at effecting a change in MonitoRadio's employment policies." That effort began with a letter sent this week to the general manager of radio programming for the Christian Science Publishing Society. The letter was sent by Tony Tiano, president of KOED.

Because of MonitoRadio's bar against hiring gays and lesbians, "Most of the country's best journalists would not be considered 'qualified' for MonitoRadio. The narrow breadth of ethnicity and lifestyle dictated by such a hiring policy does not encompass the world on which your radio programs report. Nor does it define the world to which you promise sound news coverage," wrote

The letter continues, "The make-up of KQED's staff reflects the community. We cannot accept less from the organizations which supply our programs. If MonitoRadio reports only through the experience of Christian Scientists, its scope narrows to reporting from a religious viewpoint rather than news: KQED has interest in the program because it is a news pro-

Said Rick Pacurar, out-going president of the Harvey Milk Democratic Club, "We are setting a national precedent if we can force MonitoRadio off public radio. We are saying that you can't discriminate against gays and lesbians and get away with

Sup. Harry Britt added his voice to the chorus calling for the exit of MonitoRadio from KQED when he told B.A.R., "There is a strong commitment on everybody's part that MonitoRadio has to be dealt with."

MonitoRadio earned the ire of the gay community when the group that produces it, the Christian Science Monitor, fired reporter Christine Madsen when it learned in 1981 that she was a lesbian. In the subsequent trial in which Madsen tried unsuccessfully to regain her job, the newspaper persuaded the Massachusetts court that all its employees were church employees and thus exempt from the Boston gay rights law.

KQED offered this week to recommend a gay or lesbian for its official slate of candidates for the station's board of directors in 1988. However, a former lesbian member of that board told B.A.R. in an interview last year, "I resigned from the board one and a half years ago from frustra-

Tracy Garvey added, "KQED is a huge bureaucracy and the board has very little power there over programming. It's primarily the staff that has control."

Also talking about the significance of a gay board appointment was Roberta Achtenburg, an attorney with the Lesbian Rights Project. "It's like anything else, if you are the only one then you are a lone voice. It's pretty hard to horse trade on these boards when you are the only one raising an issue. If you stop a war because of a token appointment, then you're making a big mistake."

On the issue of gay-oriented programming, KQED's response to the gay leaders was unequivocal. They just said no. Said the station's written response which was given to the gays and supervisors Harry Britt and John Molinari at a two-hour meeting on Feb. 6, "KQED's policy is to integrate programming about the various communities we serve with our overall coverage of cur-is served up on KQED radio on Sunday evenings between 11 p.m. and I a.m. Chinese Community Programming in Cantonese takes up the first hour, followed by Israel Magazine and Spanish language programming produced by National Public Radio.

Gay leaders have called for similar programming to be aimed at the gay and lesbian audience. In fact, David Lamble was allowed to present gay-oriented programming on KOED-FM at 6:30 p.m. on Sunday evenings for several Sundays in January when it appeared that board of supervisors' hearings would be held on city funding for the station. Lamble was taken off that time-slot

Condom Week Promotes Safe Sex As Rubbers Come Out of Closet

A Dickatholon on Berkeley's UC campus next Friday may be the country's most spectacular celebration of National Condom Week. An enterprising group has banded together and designated the week of Feb. 14 through 21 to focus attention on, what they describe as, the "often maligned condom."

In Sausalito, the Pharmacists treatment centers and health Planning Services have announced the National Condom Couplet Contest and are inviting people to "stretch their imagination and come up with a rubber rhyme."

In San Francisco, the AIDS Foundation is planning to have people in costume distributing material at BART and Muni stations about safe sex practices. They join other AIDS groups throughout Northern California in promoting condom use.

David Mayer, 26, a co-founder of National Condom Week said, "This is an effort to affect change in the rates of sexually transmitted disease and unwanted pregnancy by putting condoms on the public agenda,' he said. "The often-maligned condom must be promoted in new and provocative ways-it's not only disease and pregnancy we're combating, it's the risk of National Condom Week events first took place on the U.C. Berkeley campus in 1979. Last year, 15 campuses and health organizations sponsored activities. Over 75 participants are expected this year from campus student health centers and fraternities to drug agencies across the country.

Rena Orenstein, coordinator of Condom Week events, said "The condom has now begun to come out of the closet. We are finally able to change the condom stereotype. We are getting rid of the sleaze factor," she said.

Orenstein credited KRON-TV's new condom advertising policy for giving their efforts a big boost. Wayne Shannon asked that the contraceptives be called "KRONdums." "That's what we call them here at the station," he

Shannon said he would not be personally covering the Dickatholon in Berkeley. The Dickatholon is actually an umbrella term to describe four separate events. Orenstein said the first event will be a pregnant man con-

The final event will be a Pinthe-condom-on-a-man game. It will be similar to pinning the tail on the donkey. Orenstein said they will not use a real man.

How Much Is Enough?

Task Force Wants $700M for AIDS But S.F. Group Demands $2 Billion

by Charles Linebarger

The Mobilization Against AIDS in San Francisco has called for a $2 billion federal budget to be spent on AIDS education and research in the coming year. However, the National Gay and Lesbian Task Force and the AIDS Action Council recently released a call for $700 million for AIDS research and education. The upshot is that Mobilization is accusing its fellow lobbying groups of a lack of vision. They in turn call Mobili-

"This is a critical issue for the community," said Paul Boneberg, director of the Mobilization. "NGLTF has undercut the community's ability to get more AIDS funding. They've gone public asking for $700 million. That's not enough. We believe that great increases are obtainable in 1987."

Boneberg charged that the Task Force formulated its demands on needed AIDS spending in comparison to what the Reagan administration is asking for rather than in light of the needs in the local communities. He also blamed the publicity the Task Force had given to its $700 and it became clear that we could million recommendation for problems Mobilization may have tion to Congress to support higher funds for AIDS.

In Washington, Jeff Levi, director of NGLTF, responded to Boneberg's accusations. Said Levi, "Unlike Mobilization, we we can get through Congress. AIDS budget. He said NGLTF existing institutions can gear up funding from the feds. to spend in a year's time."

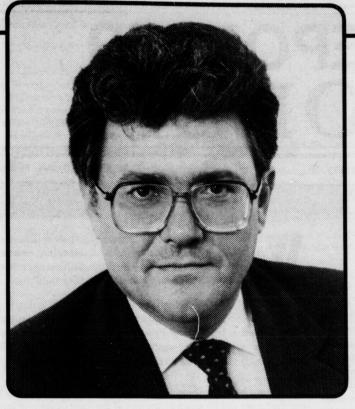

This is not the first time that Boneberg's group has disagreed with the Task Force on federal AIDS funding, explained Boneberg. "In 1986, NGLTF wanted to stop the AIDS budget cuts so that the $220 million Congress had allocated for AIDS would stand. Mobilization was calling instead for a doubling of the AIDS budget to a total of $500

"In the end Mobilization put pressure on key Congresspeople get more money and they (the Task Force and other AIDS lobin getting the Bay Area delegabies) changed their position. If we hadn't pushed for more money we would have ended up with a much lower figure."

A MESSAGE FROM SUPERVISOR HARRY BRITT:

"Our opportunity to make history... and our duty to try."

n the April special election we have an historic opportunity—the only opportunity in the forseeable future—to elect an openly gay member of Congress from San Francisco.

I'm proud that our community is in a strong position to win this election and, indeed, make history. Leadership on our issues, especially AIDS, is desperately needed in

Also important for all San Franciscans is our responsibility to preserve the tradition of open, accessible politics through which leaders such as Phil Burton, George Moscone and Harvey Milk emerged.

Each of these progressive leaders won election because he was right on the issues, courageous and forceful in demanding change, and effective in making government respond to the needs of people.

In eight years as a Supervisor, on issue after issue, I have worked hard to forge alliances with individuals, organizations and ethnic communities that share our vision of a just and humane society. Not only did they join us in our battle against Prop 64, but they are responding enthusiastically to my candidacy for Congress.

People concerned about protecting neighborhoods and the environment, peace activists, health care advocates, working people, senior citizens, small businesspeople, and of course, the lesbians and gay men of San Francisco are assembling a massive grassroots effort for the campaign.

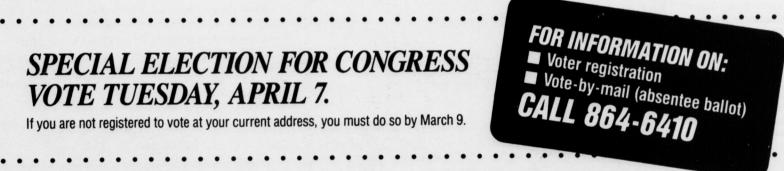

We face a tough fight—but we'll win it!

We will need hundreds of thousands of dollars to wage an effective campaign—and we have less than two months to raise it. We expect our main opponent to spend up to a million dollars. But just as Harvey Milk overcame his better-financed opponents through committed volunteers working block-by-block, neighborhood-by-neighborhood,

The campaign will be intense, exciting and historic. I hope you will be a part of it—volunteering whatever time and money you can afford. Please-fill out the coupon below, or call my campaign headquarters at 864-6410. We need whatever help you can give.

Winning the Battle, Losing the War

isdom and progressive thinking come so rarely and in such small doses from the Reagan Administration that we tend to treasure any sign of humane action from Washington. An example is the speech by U.S. Surgeon General C. Everett Koop. Koop recently stunned everybody by stating that school kids should have candid sex education at as early an age as possible - like, the third grade. He even said that any realistic sex education has to talk about sex (i.e., having sex). In order to stem the epidemic of AIDS, kids have to know what to do and not to do.

Conservatives were left gasping at the thought. Sex education that talks about sex!! It's immoral, so we must let people sicken and die, they

In Koop's defense, supporters have said, the kids are going to do it anyway, so we might as well give them some practical advice on how to avoid disease. This is the progressive view.

It's a good point - for what it's worth. True, teens, like their elders, have for ages found ways of doing sex even without instruction and likely will continue to do so.

right to be sexual. It is not immoral, unhealthy, or unwise. It is good clean fun - or would be if the guilt mongerers wouldn't pollute our beds with their dirty words and dirty thoughts. Until that kind of thinking is challenged we're not going to get very far. The conservative prudes might be put off with the pragmatic argument. But sex as healthy activity - meaning for emotional and personality growth, not just hormones run rampant - is still taboo. Winning the battle on the prudes' terms could still lose us the war.

Even our hero Dr. Koop is backsliding, feeling it necessary to point out that never did he mean to approve of the "perversions of homosexuality" by which, he says he means, only the more extreme sex acts gay men do. What the hell does that mean? Does he draw this line at certain acts, positions, or lengths? After all, any act can be extreme - if

So, here we are — one step forward, two steps back. If we're going to get anywhere in stopping AIDS through real sex education, this moralistic puffing has to stop. Since the kids will do it anyway, why not let them — and us — enjoy it. It makes no sense to give them condoms and still require that they sneak off to use them.

Call the Police

ot long ago, a friend of mine was robbed by someone he'd met in a bar, befriended, and brought home. When he discovered the officers came to his house, he told them what had happened, they took a complete report and sent over a lab person to get fingerprints. The That contact has paid off, however, with police learning that gay citizens whole experience was conducted in a totally professional manner.

This may be the only city where that kind of professionalism is given to gay-related complaints by patrol officers. In most places, gay men who are the victims of trick-thieves quietly overlook the matter for fear of worse damage. The last thing they'd do is call the cops.

Even here in San Francisco, this is a new development. And one that had to be fought for to be achieved. It wasn't long ago that the SFPD and the gay community were enemies, sometimes in the streets. There still is a residue of that historical suspicion of police by gay people. And every now and then, we see some clear homophobia surfacing in the ranks of the SFPD. With Cops for Christ around, it is not easy to convince gay people that they should expect and will receive fair and decent treatment from the police who are supposed to protect us, not harass us.

Behind this new sense of cooperation between the police and the gay community lies years of work sensitizing the cops to community needs. robbery, he did the obvious thing - he called the police. Patrol It's taken time and effort for police, from commanders to street patrol officers, to get to know our community and for us to get to know them. are not law-breakers but entitled to decent treatment when victimized

> Police cadets in San Francisco have benefited from academy training that has given them direct contact with the community they are to serve. To reduce that training and direct contact with minority communities would be a great mistake. If anything, the time spent by police cadets in minority communities ought to be expanded. To cut it back could set back community-police relations to the bad old days of hostility

Debate Is Not Overdue

by Weston F. Milli The Parsonage

ishop Swing officially ended all debate on Church rites for gay and lesbian couples. (B.A.R., 1/29/87)" As a member of the Episcopal Church and chair of The Parsonage, I find this very surprising "news" most inaccurate.

Some history: Bishop William E. Swing appointed a committee to examine the theological basis for rites to bless the relationships of gay and lesbian couples. Such rites were developed by a separate liturgical commission over a year ago. This Eastwood Committee Report will presently be distributed to all bishops, prominent theologians, and rectors and vicars of this diocese for comment.

Upon the bishop's return from sabbatical (to include speaking engagements on AIDS in London and South Carolina), two events for further dialogue related to the blessing will occur: (1.) The Parsonage and St. Luke's Hospital will sponsor the visit of noted theologian and ethicist James B. Nelson to speak on sexuality to clergy and lay leaders in the diocese, and (2.) The bishop will call rectors and vicars of this diocese together in retreat to discuss reactions to the Eastwood Commission Report.

In addition, later in the year The Parsonage will be working with the respected diocesan Lay Academy to present an educational program around issues of homosexuality to take place in the fall. I hardly see these plans as "officially ending all debate" as the front page teaser and headlines suggest.

Let us remember that Bishop Swing agreed with the founders of The Parsonage that there was a need for a ministry in the Episcopal Church as a place of debate, dialogue and reconciliation. It was he who commissioned The Parsonage as a Bishop's Charter Organization to be ike our friends at Integrity, we desire recognition and blessing of our committed relationships. What worshipers among us would not enjoy the opportunity to have something in our lives as important as a committed relationship recognized by our spiritual

Long-lasting solutions, however, are not made by bishop's proclamation. Bishop Swing is not the pope. What a tremendous impact it will have should the diocese agree, after careful consideration of the issues involved, that such a rite should not only be tolerated, but should enoy the frank blessing of the entire church. The recent resolution on sings which passed by 169 to 156 is no clear mandate. The onious response from many corners of the diocese emphatically onstrates this to Bishop Swing (who had to travel to many parishes to discuss this resolution with concerned parishes and clergy).

The opportunity for dialogue in the diocese at large is ripe. Hearing all sides creates a chance for reconciliation and learning. The opportunity for debate is far from ended, contrary to the implication of your headlines. Let us each pray to our God for moving this diocese along as an example to others. It can be done.

Funny Money

★ Re: Joy for "Funny Money" (Editorial, B.A.R. 1/29/87). Working in a bar on the Great Gay Way as I do, a bit of money passes my hands during a shift. Over the years, I've come to collect "Funny Money" or as I prefer "Creative Currency." I remember the first: a one dollar bill with "Art Saves Lives" stamped across the back in a brighter and more tasteful green.

Since I didn't know a paramedic named Art, and, since I also sculpt and paint, I kept it. The collection had begun. A more recent addition is another one dollar bill with the face and name of "Jesus" meticulously cut to fit in George's portrait area. That one was so well done it almost slipped through my fingers. Another still is a crisp, new FIVE dollar bill that looks like a tenement wall in the Western Ad-

But this letter isn't about "Funny Money" really. It's about government: our government and its property, and about how someone, somewhere once said that our government is one "of the people, by the people, and for the people." If that were true, then, among other things, "Government Property" belongs to . . .? (How many of you got that one?) . . and it means that we should be able to write, stamp, and paste all we want on our property.

It means we should be able to stop the nuclear poisioning of our land by the government too. It means we should have toxic-free water to drink and play in. It also means we should have access to the resources we need to combat our AIDS-riddled world without having to beg and rant and rave and chain ourselves to government property, outside, in the chill and the wind and the fog and the rain. It means we should be able to see blue skies with rainbows instead of a

It means a lot of things, but it's just not that way. So what does it all mean? I'll tell you what it all means just like the person who made that crisp, new five dollar hill look like a tenement wall could tell you what it all means. It means that when our founding fathers wrote that self-evident truth that "All men" ... (i.e. white, Anglo-Saxon, Protestant, straight males) were "created equal," they meant precisely that-quote the Eagle, "Nothing more." So go ahead, boys and girls! Get out your pens and crayons, scissors and glue and get that money funny honey. I think our property is looking a little dull anyuway.

Friends And Enemies

* You are doing a good job in reporting and chronicling the evolution of the gay liberation movement. The recent item about the ("Theocratic 32") state legislators who signed a letter denouncing homosexuality as an acceptable lifestyle to be taught in the California schools could have been more comprehensive. You ought to be publishing a friends of gay liberation list and an enemies of gay liberation list in a special section so that gay people can know whom to vote for and whom to vote against . . . a complete list of these state legislators (who are bigots) is needed so that their gay constituents will cast an opposing ballot in the next election. We know that most conservative Republicans are against the gay liberation movement, but not ALL of them-so we need to know who is for us and who is against us.

True Britt

* So we have a chance to elect one of our own finally to Congress instead of being represented by straight liberals. I for one wholeheartedly support the candidacy of Harry Britt to Congress. It is about time we stood up for one of our own. I am not straight and I am tired of being represented by people who continue to tell me that they have my own best interests at heart. Bull!! They have their own best interests at heart and enunciate my interests to gain my vote. No more!! Recent history is replete with the broken campaign trail promises to the gay communities of the

It is time for one of our own. Our Own!! Why should we take a back seat to the big straight boss? Why should we always be asked to give up control? Why? Because that is how they deceive you! They will tolerate your existence but, God forbid that you should be cheeky enough to demand true representation. Don't forget that the powers that be, the moneyed interests that have controlled our vote for so long have much to gain by keeping us down. By denying you what is your right, by deceiving you into believing that we cannot represent the greater whole.

This is what you hear coming insidiously out of their power consumed influence hungry mouths. No, they do not want you to see the light of day. They ask for our confidence, and in our sincerity we give it, only to be spat on by them in the media, by the selfsame politicians that came to us. The same kind of politicians that want to represent you again and again. They whisper the rumors in your ears that a gay person would not be effective in Congress, people would be afraid of them, so don't vote for them, vote instead for the family person, look at the picture of the beautiful children. Yes these are the lies that they use to keep you quiet. The lies they use to silence your aspirations. Many of these self-same "liberal" politicians probably say fag and lezzie behind our backs. How long must we trust them?

Our interests no longer lie with straight politicians. Our interests will only truly be furthered when we take control of our lives. When we take control with our vote. When we take control with one of our own! We must do it for that which we are, have been, and for the destiny that lies before us. A destiny of greatness vet untested in the political waters of Congress. We have the ability, the strength and the determination to see our goals reach fulfillment, to show the world that our commitment to the quality of life is their commitment. We, each of us, must stand forward, stand fast and commit ourselves to one

Myopic Provincialism

★ To vote for or against Sup. Harry Britt as successor to the late Representative Sala Burton (B.A.R. 5, Feb. p.2) one should consider the totality of his political philosophy as it relates to domestic and oreign issues.

Supporting the gentleman simply because he is gay appears as much as an irresponsible exercise of the franchise as opposing him for precisely the same

Sadly, however, myopic provincialism is not the exclusive possession of homophobes, be they heterosexuals or closeted homosexuals.

Why Defile Nuns?

* As a gay Catholic, I have mixed feelings about the announced papal pilgrimage to our city.

I too detest his views. His mindless opposition to birth control has condemned his loyalist followers in Latin America to a vicious cycle of over population, poverty and misery.

His mentality is still set in Poland where the government opposes the church. Here it is the people who oppose the church, but he handles both situa-

However I feel about the man, I respect the feelings of our straight brothers and sisters. Our city is overwhelmingly Roman Catholic. Hispanics, Italians, Irish and Franco-Americans make up a majority of our population. They let us have our gay days and parades. Let them have their day. Respect their feelings for the leader of their faith.

Most gays are Protestants from the midwest. Because of this the protest strikes me as intolerance. Catholics have been traditionally discriminated against in the heartland of our country. Please leave your prejudices behind when you join our way of life.

We native Californians of different persuasions and religions really do get along just fine.

I am glad that B.A.R. has curtailed coverage of the alleged sisters of preposterous indulgence. They are nothing more than shrill publicity hounds. If they really wanted to perform good works as they have stated, they needn't do it while defiling the image of a true nun.

nun will gladly give you her very last dollar if you asked her, even if it means she has to walk several miles to get home or go without eating. When I see fellow gay men dressed like nuns I feel deep shame. My thoughts turn to the three American sisters who were martyred in El Salvador. They went where they were needed most despite the risk

While the history and politics of the church may be repugnant, it's everyday good works vindicate it in my mind. Sisters, brothers and lay Catholics labor everyday to aid Central American refugees find shelter, employment and legal status. They risk long prison terms at the mercy of the Meese Inquisition for their efforts to aid the underground railroad which brings thousands of people escaping the U.S. government supported oppression of Chile, Paraguay, Guatemala, Salvador and elsewhere to el norte.

Nuns are the last people to turn their backs on gay people. Why single them out for abuse? If the socalled sisters must be quoted or photographed, at least give us their true legal names. Why do they hide behind make-up and false names. Is it that they know that even their own community despises them?

Bishop Swing Needs Reminder

This letter was sent to Mr. Richard W. Ploe. Co-Convenor, Integrity/San Francisco Bay

* Dear Richard:

First of all, let me congratulate you and the members of Integrity/San Francisco Bay Area for your excellent letter to Bishop Swing published in the B.A.R. I am furious at his response to you regarding your comments on his statement about the blessing of same-sex couples.

I consider his response to be not only homophobic, but also utterly inane in an age of open communications on which we all pride ourselves, in both the straight and gay communities. I believe that the Bishop was looking for a "way out" and your statement gave him the opportunity to bow out. I am afraid that the political arena within our Episcopal Diocese has brought to bear on the Bishop extreme opposition to a "real" ministry to the Gay Com-

The Bishop's refusal to be in a "public adversarial role with you" is the antithesis of an open democratic society. Bishop Swing needs to be reminded that public opinion, pro or con, comes with the territory.

Bishop Swing's refusal to be in dialogue with us is tantamount to blackmail. His refusal to listen to and minister to a real need within the gay community is not unlike the Pope's admonition of his clergy to cease ministering to the Gay Community. We need to remind Bishop Swing that when a major Christian denomination refuses to minister to a particular group of people then that denomination is missing the entire point of Christ's message of love and compassion for mankind.

I applaud your efforts. I applaud your courage. I stand resolved to fight with you and thank God for people like you and our Priest, The Reverend Robert Warren Cromey. Once again, congratulations. I

Your brother in Christ,

Thomas J. Van Etten, Senior Warden Trinity Episcopal Church

One Flew Over The Loony Bin

★ Dear Ever-whining staff of the B.A.R.—In regards to Andrew Batancourt's (sic) letter:

You people still don't get it, do you? Out here in the REAL world there are legions of gays who consider your editorial tirads (sic) as psychotic venomous dribble with a low-life penchant for melodrama. Andews (sic) letters are a value to all of us, he's only trying to match your madness with accuracy and humor and though I've always thought of your writing staff as pretty good and occasionally touched with talent, your editorial staff is from nowhere left over from the loony bin. Do you really have to spend so much time and print criticizing and clearly attacking anybody who doesn't get off on your hysterics? You'd be better off going out and buying a mirror. You clearly miss the point. Me thinks thou protests too much.

Women and Alcoholism

★ As an estimated one out of every three gay peo ple are alcoholic and as others besides the alcoholic are profoundly affected by the disease, alcoholism in the gay community is far beyond epidemic proportions. Because of such proportions, alcoholism might be said, at present, to have more of an impact on the gay community than any other disease. Alcoholism is as debilitating and life-threatening as the other major diseases such as cancer and heart disease. It is a progressive and terminal disease.

Women recovering from alcoholism and other addictions will be interested to learn that a new recovery support group will be starting up in February. The group is unique both in the subject it addresses and n the population it was created to serve. It will focus on the practical application of spirituality in our lives, and it is for women who have already passed through the initial stages of recovery.

Many facilities and programs are available for people in very early sobriety, but this is only the beginning. As we approach sobriety beyond the earliest stages, we find that ongoing recovery requires getting into some issues deeper than those of physical and emotional withdrawal. Guilt and desperation motivated us to see that our old way of life did not work. Just as strongly as we were desperate then are we desperate now to find a new way which does work.

Many of us believe that finding this new way renuires that we refine our spiritual concepts and integrate them into the whole of our lives. Our awareness of what we feel must be blended with that which is unexplainable and which we call spiritual. As we gain more and more life experience in sobriety, a need arises to add what is really a values clarification from a spiritual perspective.

We are often very surprised at what actually happens when "more is revealed." The revelation is in now we make our daily decisions, how we relate to other people, what our values are, and how we view our world. The sharing of our own experience and feelings around such issues is a sharing of our own spiritual evolution. The group process is a spiritual vehicle for the exploration and discovery of our revelation—the personal meaning of "more will be revealed," and what happens when it is.

The group will be facilitated by Ruth Gabriel, a recovering alcoholic and experienced treatment counselor. If chemically dependent, participants must have 6 months of sobriety or more. Ruth may be contacted for information at 239-4965.

Peaceful Coexistence

* I want to correct some errors in Mr. Marcus' Jan. 13 column about the upcoming International Ms. Leather contest and related events.

This is not the "first time leather lesbians will be so singled out." Samois held a Ms. Leather Contest some years ago (1979 or 1980). Blush Productions held one within the last four years. Ignoring our collective history as members of sexual minorities is exactly what the het majority has been doing to us for countless generations. We have no business doing it to ourselves! Second, I have been led to believe that the contest Mistress Kathy is producing is open to all women in leather, not only lesbians.

Brothers and sisters in leather, of all orientations. have been working together in San Francisco for quite a long time, not just since Mistress Kathy got nvolved in these events. Individual lesbian-gay friendships in leather span many years. Last year, members of three San Francisco organizations, Outcasts, The 15, and The Society of Janus, spent months working together to place the first Bay Area SM Community contingent in the Lesbian-Gay Freedom Day Parade. All three organizations were represented by their own banners and members (The Society of Janus in Los Angeles also sent mambers and their own banner), along with a substantial number of people who are not affiliated with any SM organization. The contingent, which had 55 people at the staging area, marched into Civic Center Plaza more than 100 strong, men, women, lesbian, gay, bi, straight, transsexual. The three organizations also shared a large space on the plaza to provide the public with infor-

Less than a month ago, members of these organizations, joined by members of other gay men's organizations and unaffiliated individuals, sang folk songs in the bars in the South of Market area . . another display of the ability of men and women in leather to work together.

Mr. Marcus seems to imply that anyone not involved with the Ms. Leather activities is not concerned with cooperation among men and women in leather. Given the range of activities in which men and women in leather have been long involved, the terms, "pessimistic dialogue" and "germinating" (assuming he used the word to mean birth or beginning), are unfortunate choices.

I think acknowledgement of this poor choice of words is due to readers and to those of us who have actually accomplished a "loving, understanding, and peaceful coexistence" among many gay men, les women and others in leather, of all orientations and genders in San Francisco.

Smokers Begone: Terminal What?

* It has probably (hopefully) been proposed many times by others, so when are we pretty-damnconscious gays of San Francisco going to create a comfortable bar for nonsmokers? I salute the Castro Country Club for its contribution to a social setting free of alcohol and yet in all respect, with well over 200 gay bars in our great city, it's not the booze that makes me smelly, sickened and nauseated, but the fumes!

Talk about true lack of consciousness: the sign on the new Coming Home Hospice on Diamond Street reading "A Home for Terminally Ill People of San Francisco." No disease is a "terminal" one unless we ourselves define it as such, and allow it to become so. And even if it were true, the mere use of the term is at least half the battle lost.

Tainted Love (to Michael)

★ This is a story about a love that happens often in this day and age of a crisis we call AIDS, or sometimes doesn't happen, sadly enough. "You make me so happy" or "You give me reason to live," are words so many people with AIDS wish they could say or hear. Loving someone with AIDS isn't easy, but has become the happiest experience in my life.

Some friends have asked me, "Why are you setting yourself up for eventual pain and grief?" The only reason I can come up with is that I love Michael. To me love is more. Love is caring for and about someone. My love is centered on caring and love. The everyday problems are difficult, more so than the

When Michael and I first met. I didn't know about his sometimes difficult battle with AIDS. We worked together until his bout with PCP. We didn't see each other for six months, but I still felt compelled to try and continue our relationship, wherever it

It picked up again in October, and since then my life has taken some unexpected twists. Whereas AIDS was something that took a lesser priority, it has now become an integral part of my life. We've been lovingly a part of each other's lives ever since. I must admit, these have been three of the most trying months of any relationship I've been involved in. However, I wouldn't change any minute of it.

We've had our problems centering around the most common of problems in most relationships, to the most difficult, accepting the facts of AIDS, and accepting the facts of dying, and living.

The purpose of this letter is to express my joy and happiness about my life now. The converse is the fact that so many people with AIDS don't have someone to care or show they love them. This is a problem that faces the gay community, and the straight community as well. We all as members of this community we call "Oz," have the responsibility to reach out to our brothers and sisters who desperately need a helping hand or a shoulder to cry upon. There are many ways we can all help, all we need to do is to reach out

No Drug Treatment Center?

* There are treatments for drug and alcohol abuse. There are gay support groups that work. Unfortunately, many people require intensive treatment by the time they discover drug addiction isn't fun. Longterm treatment is available at a cost.

Most drug users don't keep up on their medical insurance. Those with no money face waiting lists for short-term treatment that often isn't enough to get them back on their feet. Recently, I tried some resources to find help for two gay heroin addicts. There was nothing available. They went back out on the streets and do whatever they had to do to get by.

If our government were truly concerned about the drug epidemic, there would have been a drug treatment center for drug users to go to

Rude Treatment

* On Feb. 21, the Court System of North America will meet in San Francisco and the Imperial Court of San Francisco will hold their annual coronation.

However, the Imperial Movie Capital Court of Hollywood will attend neither. Last February several members of our organization, including our Empress Hazel de Commoner, journeyed, at their own expense, to San Francisco for the Courts Conference and Coronation.

The Hollywood Court had been invited to attend the Court's Conference. However, our delegates had difficulty in being seated.

We turned our protocol in at the Protocol Meeting. After coronation began, the order of presentation was posted; the Hollywood Court was not listed. Even though members of the San Francisco Imperial family and the evening's emcee's passed our table many times, and everyone knew where the Hollywood Court was sitting, not one of them had the courtesy to advise us that the Hollywood Court was not welcome and would not be presented. Only after our Empress Hazel and Mr. Cal Coburn made numerous inquiries of many individuals did we learn we weren't welcome at which point we left.

In our party was Mr. Morris Kight, a guest of Christopher Street West; a resident of San Francisco and a person with AIDS (Mr. Steve Loignon, a popular manager/bartender South of Market), and two people who were guests of the San Francisco Stallion. Our San Francisco guest remarked that he was "ashamed to be a member of the San Francisco Gay Community," due to our shabby treatment.

The day following the coronation the Hollywood Court held a function for the S.F. AIDS Assistance Fund at the Stallion. In spite of the fact that few of the S.F. Imperial family showed up, we raised $500 for this organization.

Upon our return to L.A. we wrote letters to the S.F. Tavern Guild and much, much later, in May and June we received what can best be termed bullshit

Even though the Hollywood Court is recognized by the entire L.A. community and has raised some $90,000 for charity during our 21/2-year existence, the International Courts Community doesn't acknowledge us as a legitimate court. It should be noted that the Hollywood Court is a California Nonprofit Public benefit Corporation, while the majority of those who refuse us recognition are either unincorporated associations or are privately owned.

that were published following the S.F. Courts Conference '86, we were denied listing in the International Courts Register

Letters from us, and our attorney, to the custodian of the Courts Register have gone unanswered.

While the Hollywood Court complied with rules

Likewise, a letter to Empress Nicole Murray, cochairperson of this year's Courts Conference, also has gone unanswered.

We wish San Francisco's Imperial family and the International Courts Conference the best of luck on Feb. 21, but owing to the rudeness and hostility shown to us last year the Hollywood Court will find something else to do that weekend-something constructive-something profitable for our community.

No Such Thing As Safe Sex

* I have been wondering why the AIDS epidemic keeps growing in epidemic proportions with 250,000-300,000 deaths projected for the United States alone by the end of 1991. Even though from the available statistics, it appears that the relative percentages of the AIDS-affected men have decreased, the epidemic nevertheless keeps marching on, and the actual number of the gay deaths keep

I happen to maintain that this course has been made relentless. We are helpless, as there is no such thing called safe sex. Whomever had invented the term must have been vile. He or she ought to be tarred and feathered and carried to the stake. The media facets have been equally blameworthy as they have been the ones to spread this lie around.

Can the sexual activity between any two people be such that there be no microscopic tears or body fluids, including sweat, of course? This is hard to imagine for this fellow. The magical sheets of supposed prevention, commonly known as condoms, may also become traumatized. After all, if the sperm can get through the "unbroken" condoms and result in pregnancies, the much tinier and virulent HIV can, too. To claim that various sheets prevent AIDS is a lie. The best one could say is that these sheets retard the spread of the virus and that they in themselves are never 100 per cent failproof.

I have never seen a single study on the efficacy of effectiveness of condoms or similar contraptions in spreading AIDS. If you have, please enlighten us all of your readers. But it seems to me thus far that the so-called prevention of AIDS by condoms is a good example of a blind leading the blind what with all the media always happily pointing the way down the primrose path.

Revival In Portland

★ Back in 1977, long before jack off clubs hit the scene, Ben Gardiner held a weekly jack off evening with the lights on and with discussion as part of SF Gay Rap. (Remember Gay Rap Body Night?) I remember that many people refused to participate because they would rather do "it" in the dark. That attitude was hard for me to understand, since I had never considered sex dirty or secret.

I got a lot of pleasure from Ben's jack off night. The dynamic was totally different from anything I had experienced before. If I talk about the camaraderie and feeling of oneness it all seems trite. The only way to know this feeling is to experience it.

But taking this idea and creating a jack off club is wrong. I went to the 1808 last year and the place felt colder, with more attitude than anything I had ever experienced. I'm afraid the jack off club will become another substitute for personal relationships. The main reason I left San Francisco is because I no longer felt I could find a close personal relationship with someone in the City. Though Portland still has a cow town past. I think the future may be here. In less than three months, I am in love again and am developing a good circle of friends. David Kaye

However, it must be said that even Falwell can be flexible about presidents and gays. he conversation at dinner began innocently enough. "I'm really pissed," I told my Australian friend, Craig. "It took me forever to find a parking

"But I thought you didn't drink," said Craig. "How could you be drunk already, anyway?"

"Have I missed something?" I replied, "I said I was pissed, i.e. bummed, ticked off, steamed. Parking in this neighborhood is

"Oh, I thought you meant drunk," explained Craig. "In Australia, pissed always means drunk, never aggravated."

That's how it began—but not how it ended. Soon we were discussing all manner of linguistic differences, ostensibly so I would be better-informed in case I decided to fly to Australia on the spur of the moment for the finals of the America's Cup.

Being the cheap trash that I am, however, I could not resist inquiring about words for specific parts of the body as well as for various bodily functions. Craig was happy to oblige, and the conversation quickly plunged to the gutter, as conversations inevitably do-at least when I am

Having just spent a few months in England, Craig was able to tell me, for instance, that "Willie" is a popular word for penis in England, although it is not as popular in Australia. The most common terms for the male member in Australia, as in America, are dick and prick. Craig's countrymen also favor the words tool and fella as in "me old fella."

Australian men, like men everywhere, put their pricks to various uses. Perhaps the most common of these in this day of safe sex is wanking, otherwise known as "tossing off" or "pulling yourself off." (Be advised, however, that a wanker usually refers to someone who is conceited, not to someone who masturbates regularly.)

asturbation is also called 'one off the wrist" (not very common, according to Craig) or "feeding the chickens" ("because you go like this with your hand," he explained). Then there is that popular euphemism, "tug." Craig does not know (nor does he care) how often Crocodile Dundee tugs himself, but tug he must, when he is not putting another shrimp on the barbee.

A few Australians still have sexual intercourse, otherwise known as rooting, shagging, or buggering, (this last refers only to anal sex). These terms are not always used literally, however. "I'm rooted," "I'm buggered," or "I'm stuffed" all mean "I've had it. I'm tired." If a thing rather than a person has had it, Australians (crass Australians, mind you) say "It's had the dick" or "It's up the razz."

And guess what a razz is? The same thing as a bum or arse, I suppose, although Craig did not elucidate on this point.

He did mention that an antiquated term for an ass in Australia is an acre, as in the expression, 'He's got six axe handles across the acre." (Translation: He's got a big butt.)

"If you go to England, however," Craig continued, "be careful when you use the term 'fanny.' There it means vagina, not ass. I got in trouble a couple of times that way."

T aturally, Australians have derogatory terms for homosexuals. The most common is poofter (pronounced pooftah), as in "You rotten Commie poofter bastard," the great Australian curse.

Another term is bugger, although most Australians use the term affectionately, ignoring its baser meaning. Schoolboys use the terms "poo jabber" and "butt puncher." The word faggot is almost never used.

Gay people have their own terms for one another, of course, especially queens (whom Craig calls "the Girls"). Effeminate homosexuals are referred to as "friend of Dorothy" or "as camp as a row of tents." They never call each other Mary but Auntie Steve or Auntie Paul instead. (Better vet, Auntie Stevette or Auntie Paulette.) Pet and dear are other popular sobriquets. And in Australia, the Girls are not dizzy but frizzy-sort of like my hair.

The men that other men admire are spunks (which in Australia means hunks, although in England it means semen). "Isn't he a spunk?" or "Check all the spunks on the beach today" are frequently heard comments down Spunks often have "packed lunches" (i.e. big baskets, a term never used in Australia). Lunch is served in the cut or uncut varieties. Dessert, at least in the old days, consists(ed) of sprog (better known in America as iism, cum or sperm).

Had enough? Never! Gay Australians rarely use the expressi

"Puh-leeze!" "Spare me," or "honey." They do, however, say "Ka-ween!" "How rude!" "Darling!" and "Bitch!"

"Doing the beat" means beat).

"Bite your bum" means fuck off, and "Sit on me face and peddle me ears" means, well, exactly what it implies.

Craig might have proved to be an inexhaustible supply of information, had not the waitress brought us our check at last. I didn't mind not learning more, for I was beginning to be appalled, I confess, at the amount of filth the mind of this seem-

Liberace Didn't Want To Be Another Rock Hudson

Coroner Charges Coverup in Entertainer's Death; May Have Violated Law in Revealing HIV Status

by George Mendenhall

Liberace, one of America's leading entertainers, died last week trying to conceal that he had AIDS, just as he had also concealed his sexual orientation from the public. In the past 17 months it has been reported he personally knew he had ARC, which suddenly developed into AIDS. He died believing that his secrets went with him.

Riverside County Coroner Raymond Carrillo was disturbed that Liberace had died at home without a doctor present. Although relatives objected, he ordered an autopsy as rumors continued that the entertainer had died of AIDS. He refused to sign the death certificate filed by the entertainer's doctor.

Carrillo called it a "coverup" that the cause of death was given as "cardiac arrest due to heart failure brought on by a chronic problem in the brain." He told reporters bluntly, "That doesn't make sense. Someone tried to pull a fast one on us. In layman's terms, Mr. Liberace died from an opportunistic disease caused by Earlier, Carrillo stirred controversy when he said the deceased had tested positive on the AIDS virus antibody blood test taken before his death. Officials of Mobilization Against AIDS immediately investigated whether the coroner had violated a California law which prohibits HIV test results from being revealed without a person's consent. The state Attorney General will be asked to rule that the law applies after a person has died.

Leonard Graff, National Gay Rights Advocates director, told Bay Area Reporter, "people are entitled to dignity after death. Otherwise it will foster distrust of government and people will be afraid to have the test for fear it will later be leaked to the public. NGRA attorney Ben Schatz said it was "unfortunate that he [Liberace] did not become public about his condition. People should come out about having AIDS. However, the announcement about Liberace's test result s an abuse of discretion."

A simple funeral was held for he pianist even though in a 1964 nterview he had said, "I want to be as glamorous in death as in life, people would expect it of me. expect I'll go all out." However, ne became reclusive at his Palm Springs home in the final weeks and had a quiet service at a Roman Catholic church across from the residence. Five hundred people attended.

Liberace withdrew from entertaining in Sept. 1985, after discovering a lump in his groin. He began making trips to a Las s hospital under the nam 'Lee Michaels'' in October. He was diagnosed as having an ARC condition on Oct. 2-nine days before actor Rock Hudson died of AIDS. He tested positive on the HIV antibody test, but resumed his career in March 1986, even though ill.

Doctors diagnosed him as having AIDS in Aug. 1986, but he was determined to perform a scheduled, sell-out 21-performance stint at Radio City Music Hall. Although he was thinner than usual, he was lively, dancing with the Rockettes and swinging overhead on a pully. The 110,000 people who had paid $2.5 million were unaware that backstage, he was inhaling oxygen. Numerous published New York interviews with the star failed to mention any illness. Shortly after the grueling New York schedule, Liberace canelled all of his night club ap-

There has been continuing speculation as to the reasons why the entertainer consistently denied he was gay. He was a devout Roman Catholic, aware of the church position on gay life. He knew that such a revelation would seriously damage his successful career, and he feared that he would become known as a gay person rather than an entertainer. In the end he plotted to keep his AIDS condition a secret. One friend told the National Enquirer, "He [Liberace] said the only thing people will remember about Rock (Hudson) is that he was gay and died of AIDS. He said, 'I do not want to lose my fans' respect. I will take this pearances but agreed to some interviews promoting his new book. Reports continued about his weight loss. His lifetime publicist, Seymour Heller, said he had lost 25 pounds because he had been on a watermelon diet.

The Las Vegas Sun was the first to report that Liberace had AIDS, citing "informed sources," on Jan. 27. The entertainer's attorney, Joel Strote, called the report "false, malicious and libelous" and threatened to sue if there was not a retraction. Publisher Hank Greenspun responded by reaffirming his story and threatening the attorney for attempting prior restraint.

The entertainer's main residence was in Las Vegas where he owned a restaurant and an artifacts museum. However, late last year he decided to leave Las Vegas for his more secluded home in Palm Springs. He curtailed his late night visits to a local gay bar with an entourage. He also cancelled his large, traditional Christmas party and primarily visited with his handsome, young chauffeur and companion, Carey Wyatt. One source said Liberace began to take injections of heparin, which is given to some AIDS patients with blood

Scott Thorson, an earlier companion, visited Liberace in the final days. According to Thorson, "we reconciled our angers and hurts and mutually vowed to remember only the love and the wonderful times." Thorson had been ousted from the star's Las Vegas home in 1982 and went

PACKED HOUSES

Mr. Showmanship had begun his career 40 years ago as teenager, playing honkytonk piano in a Wisconsin bar for $35 a week under the name Walter Busterkeys. He later began appearing in small concert halls in Southern California in a traditional suit, playing classical music. There was little critical acclaim. Increasingly the concerts became a show as he added popular ditties and began chatting with the audience.

Before long he became a star as he added a candelabra to the top of the piano and began to wear expensive furs and jewels. Novelty acts and dancing waters were added. Later, in Las Vegas he began arriving on stage on a motorcycle or in a chauffeurdriven Rolls Rovce. The full houses cheered as he played piano, told mildly risque anecdotes and joked about his wealth. At his peak he made $400,000 a week in Las Vegas. There were successful records and books, plus a short-lived television show and some movie "bombs."

His close friends called him Lee and remember him as warm and a little campy off-stage. He gave a great deal of money to funds that helped musicians and to hospitals. There is no indication that he gave anything to gayrelated causes or associations.

In a recent interview by Robin Leach, the entertainer may have been thinking about his health problems when he reflected on how he had been ill some years ago. He told Leach, "I've lived a good life, and I've done some very exciting and important things in my career. If this is where I have to say goodbye, it hasn't been bad." How would he sum up his career? "I'd have to borrow from Sinatra—I did it my

Whitmire Nixes Gay-Dem 'Deal'

HOUSTON — Mayor Kathy Whitmire rejected a deal worked out between gay leaders and officials who tried to woo Democrats to uston for their 1988 national convention.

Gays had threatened to oppose Houston's bid to land the convention and portray the city as anti-gay unless organizers agreed to several demands, according to a copyrighted story in the Houston Post.

Democrats decided late Monday to hold the convention in Atlanta.

The gay activists reportedly wanted a "state-ment of philosophy" saying that if the Demo-crats choose Houston as a convention site, the city must be "hospitable" to gay people.

They insisted on a "meaningful" role on the convention host committee and that the committee help open "avenues of communication" between gays and the Houston business com-munity, according to the report.

Whitmire aide Paul Mabry told the Post that the mayor killed the agreement between gays and the host committee because she opposes allowing any special interest group to use the convention to gain concessions.

"Let me stress to you that I think any use of the host committee other than as an all-out ef-fort for this city to land the Democratic conven-tion is inappropriate," Whitmire said.

City Councilman John Goodner, who was a leading figure in opposing the failed attempt in 1985 to pass an anti-gay discrimination ordi-nance, said he was "greatly disturbed" by the

He described the affair as "another political blunder" by gays in Houston.

No Longer A Risk: Gov't Reinstates

WASHINGTON — A gay man was returned to his position as a communications specialist for the National Security Agency after a 13-month suspension.

The gay man, a veteran of ten years with NSA, had been suspended from his job because he had told the organization he was gay and was then deemed a security risk. After being suspended from his communications post, he was transferred at the same salary to a lesser clerical position.

Washington gay activist Frank Kameny, who served as the gay employee's administrative counsel, said NSA's decision was significant because it means that NSA officials no longer believe that the man's sexual orientation would jeopardize government secrets during a period when the United States has been plagued with sensational spy scandals.

he English speaking religious world has been set into a flap by the recent papal letter condemning gay life. The Episcopal Church in the U.S., and particularly in San Francisco, has been upset for several years over the issue of blessing gay relationships. In this light it is of great moment that another Christian tradition has dealt with this question for centuries in a unique

For several years, as a young priest, I had read references to the Eastern Orthodox Rite of Brotherhood by which two men adopted each other as brothers. References in anthropological texts quoted aged Balkan clergy describing this as a "marriage

Other commentaries listed it as having been considered a sacrament in earlier ages, but none quoted the text.

Further research showed that such a service did indeed exist in the Service Books of both the Greek and Russian Orthodox Churches. But it had never been translated into English and was definitely "out of fashion" these

I discovered the original text in a 16th century Euchologion, or compilation of various rituals, printed in Venice in Greek and Latin. The introduction to the rite describes it as having been established by the Byzantine Church in Constantinople to provide a means of establishing family ties between two "men who have come to love each

"The Church provides for the various needs of men and she celebrates marriage to establish families and provides an adoption service to bring orphans into existing families," says the introduction. With this rite, she is giving a means for the sanctification of friendship through the establishment of two men as brothers.

In Greek, the service is called Adelfopoian, making brothers. In Slavonic it is Bratimstvo, the brotherhood. The use of this form was sanctioned both by civil and ecclesiastical law in the Byzantine Empire and conferred rights of inheritance. Unlike marriage, which could be either annulled or dissolved, fraternal adoption was irrevocable. The original rite comes from perhaps the sixth century and our form

As with many Orthodox blessings, it was probably added on to Sunday liturgy. It is a brief formulary consisting of a litany and several prayers of benediction. During the celebration the two brothers-to-be hold lighted candles (also a part of the marriage service).

Their relationship is compared to that of the apostles of Christ, "who were brothers in holiness," asking God to "make these Your servants like unto Your apostles' and "without mistrust to turn to one another" and that He grant them a "firm faith and a love without dissimulation.'

The rite also compares them to several sets of martyrs who are known to the tradition as "brothers" though they had no blood ties. It asks God that like these martyrs, "Your servants, though not bound by blood, be joined with bonds of love. Grant them a love mutual and without offence and a brotherhood upset by naught of hatred, all the days of their lives.'

At the end of the rite the directions tell us that the two new brothers kiss each other while the priest sings a brief hymn in honor of the apostles and then gives the dismissal blessing that ends all Orthodox services.

While this service has fallen out of use among modern Orthodox, it is a perfectly legitimate part of our tradition. I translated it some years ago and used it in a slightly modernized version while active in the Midwest.

This last year I published it in a full form for contemporary use as the Office for the Establishment of Spiritual Brotherhood: A Rite for Collateral Adoption.

This format provides a set of scriptural readings and additional prayers from ancient sources and Biblical texts to fill out the structure of the rite and to weave two other theological motifs of brotherhood into it: the image of friendship seen in the story of David and Jonathan and the Biblical concept of a covenant relationship by which God is made witness of a pact of

In this edition, the service has been celebrated only twice and has had a very warm reception on the part of those involved. Our mission in San Francisco makes it available in general for men wishing to celebrate established friendship. It is easily adaptable for use by women as well.

Not all reaction has been favorable, however, and this past summer our own synod was wrent with discord over the publication of the service and an archbishop resigned in protest. However the other bishops of the synod stood by us defending the rite as perfectly Orthodox and appropri-

The particular strength of the service lies in its provision of a religious context of meaning for same-sex relationships free from the area of marriage and the heterosexual model of intimate relations through use of the concept of collateral adoption.

It also bears luminous witness to the subtle wisdom of the Eastern Church in providing for the spiritual nourishment of members of its flock with particular needs in an era before the birth of modern homophobia destroyed the rich classical philosophy of friendship in the writings of pagan and early Christian

The elan of the celebration that the rite makes possible is summed up in one of its closing phrases: "Finally, brothers, care for each other, be of good comfort, be of one mind, live in peace and the God of love and peace shall be with you." This is a quote from the Apostle Paul to the Cor-

AIDS Emergency Fund Helps Pay the Bills

7 ou've just been diagnosed with AIDS. In addition to the emotional devastation such news can bring, your major source of income suddenly ceases to exist. Out of work, nearly out of money, you wait for the wheels of the bureaucracy to begin grinding out some financial assistance. In the meantime, there is rent to be paid; phone bills, utility bills and medical bills mount up. At a time like this, a month or even a week is a very long time to wait for money. As the AIDS crisis continues in San Francisco, this scenario will play itself out over and over, creating hardship that can only be imagined by those not directly involved.

the Fund.

In August 1985, Patrick Phelan was faced with this situation. Terminated from his position with an international travel firm because of his AIDS diagnosis and forced to sell his home in order to pay his medical bills, Phelan's money problems had reached a critical level. It was the AIDS Emergency Fund that came through, quickly, with a grant that helped pay Phelan's rent over a three-month period, until Social Security payments could begin.

"I was trying to get by on $411 a month and it was virtually impossible," Phelan said.

"There are people in the community that care and their help allows people with AIDS to continue their lives with a certain amount of dignity," Phelan continued, referring to the AIDS Emergency Fund. To date the Fund has helped over 1,000 people with AIDS in the Bay Area.

Phelan is currently on the Fund's board. He was instrumental in setting up and staffing their office at 1550 California Street and "provides a PWA's viewpoint at board meetings." There are 16 members on the all-volunteer board and approximately 25 other volunteers work in the office, answer phones and record information for the files.

The brainchild of Walter Mellon and Rick Booth, the Fund has been in existence since late 1981. It was then that Mellon and Booth realized there was a need for short-term financial assistance to people with AIDS. It was a need not being met anywhere else. Officially made a tax-exempt nonprofit organization in 1982, the fund is non-political.

George Burgess, director of public relations and past president of the Fund, puts it this way, "We don't want political issues to get in the way of our goal which is to provide financial assistance to people with AIDS."

How does someone qualify to be a grant recipient? The process is relatively simple. An AIDS diagnosis, verified by a physician's statement, and earnings of less than $700 per month, verified by an income statement, plus residency in one of the immediate Bay Area counties is all that's

Once a person qualifies, the money is dispensed, by check, directly to the provider of services. Checks are no longer imprinted with the Fund's name, which allows for a certain level of anonymity for the recipient. A cash amount for 10 percent of the total grant amount is also possible. Decisions about what the money may be used for are made on a case by case basis.

Typical requests include money for rent, medical expenses, phone bills ($100 max$400 per person, with a running tally kept until the maximum is Standing are Kevin Speitel and Bill Fink. reached. Thirty-six fundraising events are scheduled for 1987. Over the years, fundraising efforts have been increasingly successful. In 1983, $50,000 was raised. In 1984, $70,000, and in 1985, $126,000 was collected. When all the dollars are counted for 1986, the total should be somewhere near $190,000. This year, sights

Ninety percent of this money goes back out again to people with AIDS. The rest goes for postage, phones, office rent and printing. "When an expense omes up, the first thought is how can we get this donated," Burgess said. Thanks to a talented

Quarantine

The 14-page, single-spaced plan criticizes the AIDS testing confidentiality law and urges

HIV infection spans a spectrum from those who are antibody positive and healthy, to those who have lymphadenopathy syndrome, to those with varying severity of AIDS-Related Conditions (ARC), to those with AIDS. Currently, only those with full-blown AIDS are officially reportable.

"Reporting of HIV infection to local authorities is legally confusing and somewhat contradictory," the plan states. "Under current law, only persons with the most severe form of HIV infection (AIDS) are reportable. Persons who are infected, but with less severe manifestations, are not reportable."

The plan urges doctors to report those with "less severe manifestations" despite the confidentiality law.

The state AIDS confidentiality law, passed in 1985 by San Francisco Assemblymember Art Agnos, prohibits forced testing and bars doctors from releasing antibody test results without the written permission of the patient

Persons with ARC "may be able to be reported to the local health jurisdiction as long as the report does not include information regarding the HIV antibody test," the proposal says. "It is likely that physicians legally could report cases of clinical HIV infection (ARC) as an occurrence of an unusual disease, thus allowing the local jurisdiction to become involved with case management," the report says.

"Case management" includes ntervention such as orders of quarantine, as described later in

In the case of "persons with HIV positive antibody, and no other signs or symptoms," the proposal notes that "results of antibody tests are protected by law." But the plan urges reporting of such individuals anyway.

"It is a possibility that persons with asymptomatic infection could be reported . . . as long as the results of an HIV antibody test are not a part of the report,' the proposal says.

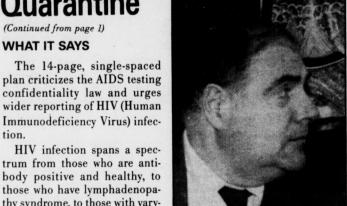

WHAT NEXT?

The next section, titled Action, is the most chilling to gay activists and some public health authorities. It talks about AIDS 'suspects' and concludes with a proposal urging a statewide facilty for "strict isolation" - in effect, an AIDS quarantine camp.

"Once a local jurisdiction receives a report of a person suspected to be willingly and knowingly engaging in activities likely to spread the infection, decisions must be made regarding what, if any, actions the local jurisdiction should take," the plan says.

The local health officer "may require isolation (strict or modified) or quarantine for any case of contagious, infectious or communicable disease when necessary to protect the public health. These measures may include a quarantine of the person or of a place," the plan points out. Such powers already exist in state law. The report describes the legal powers of health officers and states that these apply to all levels of HIV infection. And even though the state Constitution includes a right to privacy, "rights to privacy and confidentiality are not absolute and must be weighed against the necessity of protecting the public health," the report states.

Among the legal powers outlined for health officers is that of "contact tracing" - tracking down the sex partners of those suspected of being infected with the AIDS virus.

The plan then recommends three levels of intervention by health officers. Under California law, the term "isolation" is used in place of "quarantine" for the enforced restriction of behavior and movement to limit the spread of a disease.

The three levels of intervention, from least restrictive to most restrictive, are:

• Order for Examination: Orders a person to appear for a medical examination and an inspection of his medical records.

"An assessment can be made of the individual's infection, behaviors which might put others at risk, and the individual's knowledge and understanding of his or her infection and its route of transmission," the plan says.

"During the examination, the individual can be informed of steps and options available to the local jurisdiction, should the individual be unwilling to change his or her behavior," the report

 Order of Modified Isolation: Allows the local health officer to prescribe a specific isolation technique.

"For example, a modified order might prescribe counseling, and prohibit certain behaviors (high risk activities, sharing of IV drug paraphernalia). If the order is violated, the individual is guilty of a misdemeanor, and action may be taken against the individual. A part of, or result of, the action may be an order of strict isolation," the plan says.

• Order of Strict Isolation: Requires the individual to be separated from others.

"Places of isolation might be a dwelling, hotel or motel, medical or psychiatric unit, extended care facility or detention facility," says the report. A "detention facility" is a jail or prison.

> The report notes the practical difficulty of local authorities finding appropriate places for long-term, strict isolation, and calls for a state isolation facility.

"The process and identification of a facility which is appropriate for strict isolation may best be done on a statewide basis. Discussion of this issue between state and local representatives should begin," says the proposal.

WILL SPREAD AIDS

Critics of the proposal say it will increase the spread of AIDS rather than limit it

No one disputes that there are some documented cases in which nfectious individuals may be further spreading the AIDS virus. The quarantine report includes four examples:

 A gay man with AIDS-related dementia is released from a mental health program because his condition "is not serious enough to hold him against his will but they do not believe he is capable of understanding his infectious condition or controlling his sexual behavior."

· A gay man who uses needles o inject street drugs, and who has ARC, says "he is aware that sharing needles represents a risk of infection to others, and in a counseling session openly states that he does not care.'

· A heterosexual female who is antibody positive and a former IV drug user gets married. "She is unwilling to tell her new spouse of her antibody positivity."

 An antibody positive female prostitute who appears healthy, and who is an IV drug user, 'openly admitted that she is not willing to change her habits and is not willing to urge the use of

But the issue, for most AIDS experts, is how to achieve the most AIDS prevention for the most people. Promoting a policy based on the extreme examples of a few cases may drive more people away from health care out of fear - and result in a greater spread of AIDS overall.

"We want to have our AIDS message be one that speaks to the education of the most number of people. Public health motivation has to be motivated by what reaches the most people in the most effective manner," said Dr. Peters of the San Francisco Health Department.

"We are concerned about any proposal that would have the net effect of driving patients underground — and therefore have the net effect of hurting the overall public health goals involved. We look askance at any proposal that gives out the message that when you need help, you'll get handcuffs instead of a stethoscope,' said Dr. Peters.

Said Ben Schatz, an attorney on AIDS issues for National Gay Rights Advocates, "The quarantine issue is a smokescreen. It is a superficial way - and an appealing way - to make it appear as though health officials are taking firm action against AIDS when they are not.

"It is an emotional and a political response. It is not a medical response. Everybody who thinks this through will see that this proposal will only increase the spread of AIDS," Schatz said.

RESOURCES

Alameda County, which is pushing the quarantine plan, spends less per case on AIDS than any major California county. The county ranks fourth in numbers of AIDS cases, after San Francisco, Los Angeles and San Diego Counties.

Alameda County is spending $800,000 this year in local funds and has 230 living AIDS cases or about $3,500 per case. San Francisco spends more than twice that: $7,700. The city is spending nearly $10 million in local funds this year for a current live caseload of 1,300 persons with AIDS.

Response to the federal pro-

The reality of AIDS resources is even more dramatic than the figures would indicate. Health planners agree that a significant portion of San Francisco's AIDS caseload - perhaps 5 to 10 percent - comes from the East Bay, because patients believe they receive better care and benefits

Alameda County supervisors, recently the target of an AIDS vigil with activists chained to the doors of the county government center, have argued they do not have enough money to meet demands for AIDS care.

Limited resources provide another argument against a sweeping quarantine plan, said Dr. Peters. "We do not have the energy or the resources to deal with the few instead of the many," said and creating a statewide "strict isolation facility" would compete with the need for funds for preventative education.

The fear is that an "AIDS jail" would win more support from the legislature — and the governor - than education programs

It seemed clear that a national testing program would be expensive. With AIDS activists already condemning the slow pace of ederal AIDS spending, there was a fear that a new national program would block progress on research and prevention

Currently, each AIDS antibody test costs about $11 to administer. But because of the test's error rate, a series of two or three tests usually are administered, for an average cost per series of about

"From a public health perspective, the resources of the nation should be focused on education and medical researchnot on mandatory HIV testing," said the NGRA.

Dr. Peters echoed that statement. "Is this the best use of our resources?" he asked. "We want to be sure that our limited resources are used most effectively-and not just to satisfy someone's perceived need for any type of action."

Openly gay Sup. Harry Britt who is running for Congress, called mandatory testing a "coercive measure" and said it would be counterproductive and only divert attention and resources from the real challenges of the

There was powerful local support for the proposal, however. The San Francisco Chronicle, in its Feb. 5 editorial, urged mandatory testing, calling it "a sound procedure.

The Chronicle endorsed the statement of CDC director Dr. James O. Mason, who said, "Our first responsibility is to the many rather than the few." Mason's statement, and the Chronicle's endorsement of it, implied that people with AIDS and HIV infection were a separate group from the rest of American society.

HIGH TECH

Advances in blood-testing technology make widescale testing more feasible and more affordable. To date, a "first generation" method of antibody testing, called "ELISA," is used at blood banks, alternative sites, and in military recruiting.

Advances in ELISA technology have made it 95 percent accurate in most applications, but a significant share of "false positives" remains a problem This is not a concern in the blood banking industry. Blood banks discard donations even if they suspect a "false positive" - just

But a "false positive" can have a devastating effect on an ndividual-which is why many gay groups recommend against taking the ELISA antibody test except in certain limited circumstances. In San Francisco, antibody testing at alternative sites includes two and sometimes three tests in order to limit a 'false positive' reading. The multiple testing drives up the Far more accurate has been the Western Blot method, with a more than 99 percent accuracy rate. But existing Western Blot tests have been more than twice as expensive as ELISA tests.

That may change. American Bionetics of Emeryville has applied for a patent from the U.S. Food and Drug Administration (FDA) to market an automated. cartridge kit to perform the Western Blot AIDS antibody test.

Bill was born in Rochelle, Illinois and raised in DeKalb, about 50 miles west of Chicago. He showed an early aptitude for drawing and design and earned a Bachelor of Science degree in Architectural Studies at the University of Illinois at Champaign-Urbana. He went n to earn a Masters Degree in rchitecture at The University Texas at Austin in 1979. Following graduation he moved to San Francisco to work for Skidmore, Owings & Merrill, Architects. While with S.O.M. he helped design the interior of Davies Symphony Hall, parts of the Pacific Telephone SRV Center in San Ramon, and was recently engaged in projects at Oyster Point south of San Fran-

Panel OKs Pierce; The Rush Is On

And there's a surprise hero, Sen. Milton Marks—an inauspicious leader on the best of days-who steals the show in the fourth reel. It adds up to a dramatic climax when Milton Marks-shouting "I object!"stops the senate cold, at least until . . . Friday the Thirteenth.

Behind it all is a quiet, bespectacled man with a smoking submachine gun from the past: A.A. "Del" Pierce. Pierce is director of the State Department of Motor Vehicles. At least he has been director of the DMV, for 364 days now. His $70,000-a-year job runs out tomorrow, unless he wins senate confirmation on ... Friday the Thirteenth.

Last week, the Senate Rules Committee abruptly revived Pierce's stalled confirmation and sent it sailing to the Senate floor. The Republicans there tried to rush the deal through, but were blocked by one of their former colleagues-Marks, the San Francisco Republican-turned-Democrat and long time supporter of the gay community.

"Neither the president's proposed AIDS budget of $534 million nor the $700 million figure the budget committee is looking at can possibly provide the programs we need to end AIDS in this nation. They are crumbs offered in response to a catastrophic epidemic," said Boneberg.

Britt Launches Bid For Congress

Mr. Britt Hopes To Go To Washington.

Like Jimmy Stewart in the 1939 classic film, Sup. Harry Britt's voice was starting to go hoarse Tuesday at City Hall. But Britt hopes when the derby is over for the late Sala Burton's 5th Congressional seat, he'll be the leading horse.

It was high noon on the rainsplattered steps of City Hall when Britt signaled the start of his campaign for Congress. And he was ready to do battle with anyone who would deny him Burton's seat, whether it was Sups. Bill Maher and Carol Ruth Silver or Nancy Pelosi or Mayor Dianne

"What's so wrong with a bloodbath?" asked Britt as his crowd of supporters roared. 'When things are uncontested, no issues are raised."

Britt referred to his candidacy as "a legitimate voice that must be heard" from San Francisco. That voice, he said, "must come from the heart of the city. This is a battle to take that voice to the highest office in Washington."

He said he hoped that voice could have an effect on Reagan. "As long as Ronald Reagan turns his back on AIDS," said the gay supervisor, "as long as the women's movement is treated with contempt, I must speak out."

Britt was bombarded with questions about the anticipated battle between current favorite Britt and could-be favorite Feinstein. "I have no idea what the mayor is thinking," said Britt with a smile, "but if the mayor wants

Stanford Holds Great Condom Contest

by Gerard Koskovich

Student organizers at Stanford have announced plans to distribute 500 free condom samplers as part of a Great Condom Rating Contest. The give-away on Feb. 17 and 18 will kick off National Condom Week at the university.

According to Ken Ruebush, coordinator of the Stanford AIDS Education Project (AEP), "All condoms are not created equal. We want to give people a chance to try different shapes and sizes, colors and tastes.

"It makes using condoms more fun when you can experiment." Ruebush continued. "You can find which kind you like best, which are better for fucking, which taste good for sucking."

with the condom packets. "We're asking people to rate the condoms and return the questionnaire by Feb. 20," Ruebush said. "Then we'll release the results to help members of the general public become condom connoisseurs, too."

According to Ruebush, the condom contest organizers hope the event will raise awareness about sexually-transmission of AIDS and other STDs," Ruebush said. "You can tell people not to have sex, but it's not likely to stop them. If you give them a positive alternative like safer sex, they'll

The AEP condom samplers will include lubricated and unlubricated varieties, smooth and ribbed, and exotic pink and black rubbers from Japan, Rubush said. The packets will be available in White Plaza, the main public space on the Stanford campus, from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. on Feb. 17 and 18. "Anyone who wants to come by welcome to a free packet,' Ruebush emphasized. "You don't have to be a Stanford student and you don't have to be a member of the gay community. In fact, we especially hope to reach out to non-gay people."

The Stanford administration has supported the condom distribution event, according to Ruebush. "They realize how Student Health Service even donated some of the condoms we'll be handing out."

Redwood City MCC To Get New Pastor

Centering on Church life will be the keynote for Rev. Jim Segaar as he is installed as the new pastor of Calvary Metropolitan Community Church in Redwood City on Feb. 15.

By centering on church life, Segaar explained, he means working for the spiritual lives of the congregants within the ceremonial and other activities the church sponsors. One of his particular early goals will be to reestablish contacts with former members to encourage them back into active membership. "Actually, I see a more evangelical role for the whole congregation," he added.

The Pacific Northwest native comes to his new church from an education in Christian schools, college training in journalism, and work in public information before joining MCC in Seattle, where he began in the student clergy program. Before his apeation here, Segaar served in Cedar Rapids, Iowa.

Pacific Northwest coordinator for the MCC. David Pelletier, who will officiate at Segaar's installation, was the main person responsible for interesting the new pastor in the post. "He felt that Calvary was looking for a traditional pastor and so urged me to apply," Segaar stated.

"I could see that Calvary had been through some rough times," Segaar opined, "but it also appeared that it was emerging from them and was moving toward dealing with conflicts in a loving way. I was impressed with an extra-strong core group, a better one than I have seen in much larger congregations."

Not one to confine his pastorate to intra-church spirituality, Segaar recognizes the need for pastoral counseling in personal matters and for communit involvement. Already introduced

For the immediate future, Segaar's invitation to everyone is simple: "Come and see and share!" His installation will occur at 5 p.m. on Sunday, Feb. 15. PETTY CASH PROCELLOUS CONTENDERS (A "Barfing" Nose?)

Dateline, Saturday, Jan. 31, 1987: Rose Bird will appear on TV's "Superior Court"; Reagan OKs $6 billion supercollider; East Bay man drives to hospital with bomb in car; The A's trade for Ron Cey; Court clamps down on pai gow parlors; Airlines announce big discounts; A martial arts expert was sentenced in killing; Mattel Inc. and Hasbro Inc. fight over "slime"; the Lake Lounge hosted the 9th Semi-Annual Miss $1.98 Beauty Pageant.

It had been announced that 28
people had registered and paid their entry fees. The audience and MCs were, however, mercifully spared —only five showed up!
That quintet of hopefuls included: Helga Hit-Lips, Alicia Del Las Muerte, Jean Adelia, Loretta
Sweet Lips, and Elsie EverReady.

Once again, Joanna Caron brought forth some form of lotus from the muck and mire of the pageant. Her ad-libs, asides, come-backs, put-downs, and squelches kept the audience on the edge of their collective seats, chairs, and bar stools. Joanna's quips were too numerous to mention here; and if printed (Heaven forbid!), out of context, they would fall flatter than Ms Del La Muerte's chest! Suffice it to say, between her "print this" and

"don't print that" I got over befuddled and decided to just enjoy the show. I do remember, however, that when she's hungry, she'd "kill" for a taco.

Assisting with the MC duties was partner and collaborator—and one-time East Bay resident—Tommi Rose. The two work well together, but I did get the impression that Ms. Rose was stepping on Joanna's lines and was trying to up stage her. (Yes, I do happen to know the origin of the terms "up-stage" and "down-stage.") If it was, indeed, a part of the act, it should be established a little more formidably. If it wasn't a part of the act, Tsk Tsk, Tommi!

And, what would an East Bay function be without Paul M. Selling raffle tickets? This time around, he was assisted by Ralph B. and Robert H. ("Wanna buy a ticket from the next Empress?") The prizes, like the contestants, were left over from previous functions. But those who won were delighted with their "treasures."

Tammy Why-Not, Ms. 99
Cents, brought down the house with her stepping-down number from "Rocky Horror Picture Show." Her counterpart, Jackie O'NiceAss, however, managed to blow the fuses during her "Somewhere Over the Rainbow"! All sound, spots, and kliegs went out. The lights behind the bar were the only illumination. The "star" on the stage appeared lost in the dark.

You don't suppose that Judy and Starr were sending a message do you?

Out-of-Towners present at this auspicious event included the current Empress of San Franciscoi Sable Clown ("Conceived somewhere between a circus and a zoo") and Empress candidate Lily Street (named after where she lives), coincidentally, supported by Ms Caron, who told me, "Print that Lilly was the only Empress candidate to make an appearance over here!"

The winner of the pageant was obvious—the four losing contestants! Just kidding! From the very beginning, it was evident that the laurel wreath (in this case, dying flowers) would go to Elsie Ever-Ready, one of last year's runners-up. First and second runners-up this year were Misses Sweet Lips and El La Muerte, respectively. Ms. Ever-Ready will reign until July.

Sam & Marve (T&C) video taped the entire proceedings, if you're the kind who enjoys paining yourself.

After all is said and done, it was all said and done. At the top of the show, Joanna did mention that the audience should be nice to her because she was just having fun. If people didn't like what she said and how she said it, and if they were in any way offended they could go "fuck themselves!" Remember, darlings, my Italian half holds a grudge, and my Mexican half pulls a knife!"

It was, in all honesty, a most enjoyable afternoon. Those who didn't go, for whatever reasons, could follow Joanna's advice!

Proceeds of the event went to ACIE's charity fund. If the Pageant is a part of the Empire, shouldn't it be shared at other bars? I know of two shoo-in entries if the event were alternated among other bars.

FRACTURED FIBULA? (A "Crutch" Nose?)

The last reigning Mr. Lumberjack, George, won't be doing much log rolling, along with a lot of other things, for the next few weeks. He stepped in a crack-No, not BJ.'s!-lost his foothold, and crashed to the pavement. Results: broken right leg (a cast from ankle to asshole), and a broken left big toe! He was housed in Highland for a while, but should be recuperating at home as you read this. His spirits are high, and his only major complaint is, "Do you know how hard it is to take a s-t?"

If B.J. doesn't take a crash course in cooking, George is going to get very tired of pizza!

COMPOUNDED CLUNKERS (A "Why Me?" Nose)

Last week I mentioned an exclusive Bay Area engagement at Big Mama's. Somehow—was it you, Tony?—the name came out Michael Green, Not Michael Greer. Then on page 36, Sweet Lips mentioned an additional appearance by Michael Greer, in San Francisco. So much for "exclusive"!

(Typesetter's Note: No, it wasn't, Nez.—Tony)

Oh well, at least he (Michael GreeR) will appear in the East Bay first! He will perform at Big Mama's on Saturday, Feb. 14, and Wednesday, Feb. 18. Show time is 8 p.m. There is no cover charge, so get there early for best seating.

OMNIUM-GATHERUM (A "This ¿ That" Nose)

Emperor David a Scandinavian is not! His listing for the upcoming Bitches In Black mentions the locale as B. Jornson

Hall. It's really Bjornson Hall, 2258 MacArthur, in Oakland. "B In B" will be on Saturday, March 7, with the doors opening at 7 p.m. Tickets will be available at the door. I missed last year's, and have regretted it ever since. I will make it a definite point to be there this time around.

The Galaxy of Stars Court is sponsoring a "Box Social Supper" at Bill's the Eagle, this Sunday, Feb. 15. The "men" of the Courts will provide the entertainment for the show. The Box Suppers will be auctioned at 7 p.m., with the show following. "Stand by, 'cause some of those girls can cook and you might get a full course meal for a good price." All proceeds from the Social will be used to cover the cost of Valentine cookies and goodies given to patients at Fairmont Hospital AIDS Ward.

The theme for ACIE Coronation '87 will be "Inter-Galatic [sic] Odyssey." The date for the Coronation is Saturday, Sept. 26. People from Oakland Coliseum, Centennial Hall in Hayward, and Oakland Hilton have been contacted for a possible location. Let's hope the posters, announcements and programs spell it "Galactic."

Don't forget that Steve gives good movies at Revol on Tuesday nights, and Orca gives good munchies for $1.69 on Wednesday nights.

Revol's lastest in-house pool tournament will start this Sunday, Feb. 15, at 3 p.m. with the 1st and 2nd rounds. Monday, Feb. 16, will be the 3rd round and finals, at 7:30 p.m. It will be a true double elimination, with an entry fee of $5.00. Prizes are $50.00, $20.00, and $10.00.

Changing things is central to leadership, and changing them before anyone else, is creativeness. I can smile. Love, and generous community, donations come in all forms — direct dollars, hours spent on the telephone, writing, graphics and other professional services. All the office staff and board members donate their time.

Burgess himself first became involved when he was invited to a meeting in 1982. "I knew I wanted to do something (about the AIDS crisis) but didn't know quite what," he said. "At the meeting it was mentioned that two dinners were needed as prizes. That same night I happened to meet a man who turned out to be the owner of a local restaurant. I worked up my courage and got the two dinners donated."

'87 Kick-off Gala

The AIDS Emergency Fund will kick off its 1987 fundraising year with a gala celebration on the evening of Monday, Feb. 16. Using its slogan "Sharing Our Love Now More Than Ever," the Fund will announce its honorary co-chairpersons for the year. The individuals selected are Sharon McNight and Mr. Marcus.

The Feb. 16 event will take place at the Warehouse Restaurant, 333 11th Street, with no-host cocktails from 6 to 7 p.m., dinner from 7 to 8 p.m. followed by entertainment. Comedian Danny Williams and award winner

Sharon McNight will headline the entertainment for the evening. Dress will be casual.

As an added attraction, a lucky attendee will win an evening for two on the town including limousine, dinner at the Cafe Majestic and a show at the Fairmont's Venetian Room. Seats are limited for this kick-off event, so early reservations are suggested. The cost of tickets is $50 per person.

Interested persons may contact the AIDS Emergency Fund Office at (415) 441-6407.

Pierce

wanted a quick confirmation, Nielsen moved the Pierce confirmation.

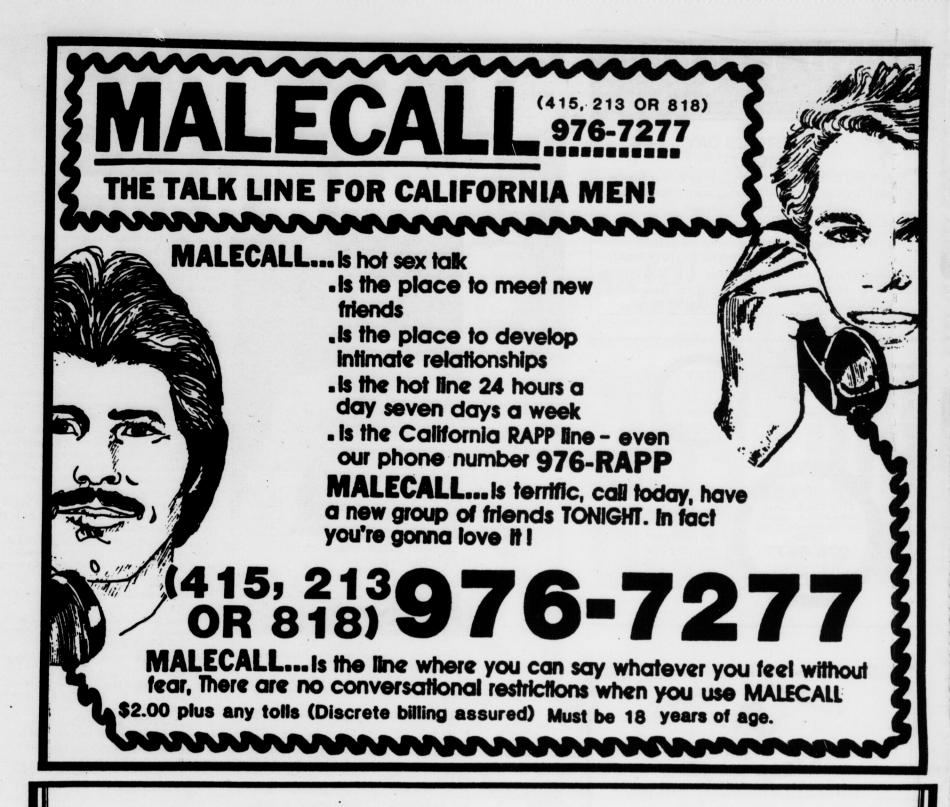

Once more senators yelled questions. It was Milton Marks who stopped the show when he rose and shouted, "I object! I object!"

Marks said he had had no time to review the transcript and demanded that, as a senator, he have the prerogative of reviewing the case before voting. He demanded the vote be delayed until Friday.

The other senators also wanted a chance to find out what all the fuss was about—before putting their necks on the line. And so Del Pierce is up for confirmation before the full senate tomorrow ... on Friday the Thirteenth.

Lizzie Borden: Working Filmmaker

by Steve Warren

ike Molly, the lesbian who is the central character in her latest film, Working Girls, Lizzie Borden has two college degrees, one of them in art history. And like Molly, who is temporarily working in a brothel, Lizzie doesn't always earn her living from her first choice of

Borden's first choice is filmmaking, which she enjoys partly for the exposure to people she might otherwise not meet - the black and gay militants of Born in Flames, the prostitutes of Working Girls, and the long-married heterosexual couples of her next project, which will star Jerry Stiller and Anne Meara. "What fascinates me," she says, "is worlds that are closed to me and how they

She began learning about prostitution during the making of Born in Flames when she met Margo St. James, founder of the prostitutes' rights group COY-OTE (Call Off Your Old Tired Ethics). The more she learned the more she wanted to share in a film. "As long as it exists there's got to be a way for women to control the images of prostitution,"

Beginning from a feminist perspective, Borden was surprised at what she found: "a lot of humor, a lot of control, a lot of power over the men (who) are vulnerable because they're going into a wo-man's space. It doesn't have to be automatically degrading and victimizing."

Only aware of street hookers and high-priced call girls, Borden discovered a wide range in between. She set her film in a not atypical middle-class brothel, where the "working girls" often stay just long enough to reach specific economic goals. If they're good they can reach those goals than if they worked in offices or other more traditional jobs.

"American society has a work ethic," Borden says. "It says you can sell your brain and that's okay, but if you rent your body, forget it! You're a fallen woman.

Being a good fuck does not make a woman a good prostitute, as Borden shows in Working Girls. "I wanted to demystify the sessions. In most houses the sex is five minutes out of a half-hour session, or 15 minutes out of an hour session." The rest is talking, making the men feel comfortable giving them the illusion of a relationship with a woman who understands them better than their wives or girlfriends do.

"The successful women are the ones who do a lot of repeat business," Borden points out. "They pick their own regulars by encouraging, being nice to the ones they like. If they don't like someone they'll act cold and distant and he won't ask for them again.'

This emphasis on building up a clientele makes the women sound like hairdressers, we suggest. "That's good," Borden says. "I've been saying waitresses it's true for any service occupation - but hairdressers is even

Another of the filmmaker's aims was "to demystify the idea that it's always about sex for the women." Unlike stories of prostitutes who have had so much sex they can't enjoy it anymore, Dawn (Amanda Goodwin) "can't wait to be fucked by her boyfriend," Borden says, "to show that it

That was also one reason for making Molly (Louise Smith) a lesbian. "She didn't dislike men,"

her creator says, "but she didn't need them. Molly's not a typical anything - artist, prostitute, lesbian, anything. I wanted to place her in a solid home environment to show she was solidly rooted. I also made her lover black because that's a less typical situation."

Unlike many streetwalkers, most of the women who work in this kind of brothel are not into drugs. "They don't get sick and they don't get arrested, so they're never counted," Borden says.

AIDS isn't mentioned, but condoms are part of the house routine at Borden's bordello. A man wanted the nudity to be nonerotic. "When Molly takes a bath at the end she's so natural with her own body the viewer shouldn't even think of her as naked."

If any character in the film is unsympathetic it's Lucy (Ellen McElduff). "One of those yuppie madams," Borden calls her. "A bitch on wheels. She's one of the exploiters, the users, there to get what she can out of men. She's the Helen Gurley Brown of prostitu-

From the strident, funky Born in Flames to the slick, rational Working Girls seems like quite a leap. "I've heard that a lot," Borden says. "Each idea demands its own treatment. Working Girls is the other end of the microscope. Born in Flames, but we never touched on how they were supporting themselves.

Both films have gotten Borden attacked by feminists. "With Born in Flames they said, 'How dare you show women carrying arms? Men carry arms." The complaint against Working Girls is obvious. "The feminist position is that prostitution is degrading,

The response here from prostitutes at last week's world premiere benefit for COYOTE's AIDS and safe sex education was more heartening, she says. "That was incredible. They said, 'This is our life. This is what we do. This is how we feel about ourselves.' It was so gratifying to know a wide variety of the real working girls liked the film and felt it right on.'

It was said last year that Borden withheld Working Girls from the San Francisco International Lesbian and Gay Film Festival because "It's not gay enough." She

by Steve Warren

an McKellan and William Shakespeare are lovers, and despite the 376-year difference in their ages, their relationship is consummated eight times a week on stage in Ian McKellan Acting Shakespeare.

Each is, in his way, a master storyteller. McKellan struts (but no one frets) his two hours upon the stage, not only acting out scenes from several plays - including but not limited to Shakespeare's Greatest Hits - but also relating anecdotes from his own life and the playwright's, demonstrating 400 years of acting styles, reading the reviews and sharing the showbiz gossip from a like period

You'll hear Sirs Donald Wolfit and Robert Helpmann dishing at the Garrick Club, and learn why Charles Laughton was a better Bottom than McKellan's sister.

Local actors are flocking to this show as if it were a master class, but McKellan teaches more by example than didacticism. The only time you may feel you're in a classroom is when the actor overanalyzes Macbeth's 'Tomorrow and tomorrow and tomorrow. . ." speech. Like most professors who do this, he gives the impression he's somewhat full of shit. Having stretched as far as "sylla-bell" he may as well go on to "a tale tolled."

I lost count of the characters McKellan plays in this one-man show, but there are enough to cause a housing shortage in Greater Tuna. They range from Samuel Pepys and George Bernard Shaw to Romeo and Juliet. There's loads of Shakespeare trivia, and a discussion of lack of actresses in the 16th century leads McKellan to speculate,

Ian McKellan and James Laurenson in the PBS production of Edward II

"Clearly some of the sonnets are written to men, but he had such a grasp of people's minds. who's to say he wasn't just writing them from another person's perspective? On the other hand, you could say Shakespeare never wrote about a happy marriage. But then, he never wrote about a happy friendship either. There's no dramatic conflict that way. "If he wasn't gay, he certainly wasn't homophobic. I think he was bisexual, but I think gays should be cool about it and say he's for everybody." McKellan (Continued on page 43)

Safe Sets In The Early Evening

Dancing Cheek To Cheek At The Trocadero

ast Friday evening at the Trocadero an event was held that was so unexpectedly popular it promises to become a regular stop on the dance circuit. The City Swing dance band, featuring vocalist Gail Wilson, got together with the San Francisco Tap Troupe and the Ritz Dancers to present an evening of entertainment and dancing which attracted a nearcapacity crowd. And boy did they

At $6 a head at 5:30 p.m. a modest, enthusiastic turn-out would not have been an unfair expectation. It was mobbed! Dance mavens flocked to the clarion call of swing music and, at 6:15, there was still a line of the gloriously gowned and dapper gents waiting to shell out and boogie. All very chic and orderly, you understand, but definitely a crowd

Dancers of every persuasion and combination thereof were represented, most of them dressed to the nines in clothes one felt certain they could not have possibly worn to work. An unprepared management hovered around the entrance trying to shoe-horn everyone in, and the show was delayed by about 40 minutes but absolutely no one cared. The mood and the look were festive and nobody was going to stop these people from having the time of their lives.

Then the show began. Gail Wilson, looking spectacular in a Charles Batt costume, opened with her rendition of "Skylark," and I tell you, it was like feeding time at the zoo. The crowd surged forward, eager to stake out some turf on the dance floor, there to execute the intricate dance maneuvers, dips, swirls, and timesteps that at times rivaled the professional entertainers, who themselves were very good.

Having a wonderful time herself, Wilson sailed through "On A Wonderful Day Like Today," and then cleared the dance floor for the first of numerous production numbers, this one "Beautiful Girls." More fabulous costumes! More stellar choreography! Then the Ritz Dancers did a turn to "Varsity Rag," followed by a medley of '20s dance numbers which drove the crowd decorously wild. Bandleader Wayne Love politely excused the performers for a much-needed intermission, and it was Katy bar the door as the celebrants fell over one another getting on the

Empress candidate Tatiana mingled with the Deco Society's Pochrons as they whirled to such classic tunes as "Naughty Lady From Shady Lane" and "Bie Mir Bist Der Schoen." Guys in leather with their boyfriends, secretaries with their husbands, same-sex couples with a wide age ditterence, and schoolteacher types with the girls of their dreams were all there, cheek by jowl, their only concern being You and The Night and The Music

The second set featured a couple of production numbers by the tap troupe, "Big City Blues" and "Sing, Sing, Sing," which had everyone applauding and cheering wildly for the drummer, whose solo was a highlight of that old Benny Goodman tune. By now the urge to dance was undeniable and Gail performed her sizzling rendition of "Hot Voodoo" before a deliriously gyrating throng, delighted for the chance to go to earth. Though 8:30 p.m. was the announced cut-off time, there were ending the final set prematurely and, having secured the assurances of the crowd that they would leave quickly and orderly the moment the set was through, the band wailed on. The exhausted and hungry may have been forced out, but the die-hards - and there were many - continued to punish the dance floor for the next half hour. Some said the highlight was Gail Wilson's mother being squired around the dance floor by bandleader Wayne Love. Others insisted that "The Continental" number, in tuxedos and grey satin evening gowns sprinkled with rhinestones, was the most elegant moment in Trocadero dance history. Many liked everything that the Ritz Dancers did, especially the dance-along attended a party last week where sex was the chief entertainment. I'm not talking "just" JO here; it was a throwback to old sex club days. Anything went. And although the host conscientiously provided rubbers, few people used them.

This made one party-goer so dyspeptic he had to leave. It wasn't merely that the fucking was unsafe, or the sucking possibly unsafe. He just couldn't understand how people could so easily blind themselves to their glands after years of safesex publicity. "How dare someone do that to someone else and think it's okay!" he sputtered. "It's

Meanwhile, cross town, there was a water sports party I didn't attend. My spy there was even more upset. "I saw people spreading the goddam virus," he cried to me. It wasn't just the questionable ingestion of urine that bothered him, but the rimming. The sponsors of this party neither offer nor follow any behavioral guidelines, though I understand there's some discussion among the group as to what they should allow. But can you expect party-goers to follow rules when judgement is clouded by large amounts of beer? CHARLES H. DUCCAN

Buzz Bense, editor of the hotoff-the-press newspaper Condom Sense, voiced concern. "I had hoped people would cope better with the grey areas of safesex that weren't jack-off," he told me. Sex in most pre-AIDS formats is still possible, but adjustments must be experimented with and acclimated to. Would-could-a watersports party be as wet with mineral water? Could a fuck party be visual and sensual with rubbers? It's time we found out. As my friend said of the unsafe activity he saw, "I just don't see any

One reason may be that Mr. Gay Public (aka Dick Head) simply hasn't applied his grey matter to the grey areas of sex that lie between the obviously safe and the obviously forbidden. There's a lot of hot sex that can still be had with only minor adjustment. We've only got to do as Aretha ad-

Another reason may be that not enough of us are taking responsibility. How much of a police force can we expect party hosts and sex clubs to be? I've seen safe party behavior shift completely when even one person indulges in unsafe activity. Instead of gently reminding people that what they're doing isn't wise, nother Folly of Sex: Impersonator Sandy Van is not only giving a funny show in The Studio at Theatre Rhinoceros with her recreations of Carol Channing, Tallulah Bankhead, and Katherine Hepburn. She's rocking the boat with her androgynous name. As two men prepared to buy their tickets the other evening, I overheard one whisper in surprise, "It's a real woman!" This threw the other. "Should we stay?" he wanted to know. My advice-stay. When you're funny, it doesn't matter what's under your drag. Sandy's held over through Feb.

The combined follies of sex and money are pretty potent, which may explain the populari-ty of Gary Aylesworth's play for two men, The Bohemian Grove. In it, Gary plays Ron Bluestein, a nonpareil known to B.A.R. readers for his many manias, but mostly for "A Waitress In Bohemia." This madcap essay, severly edited, was serialized in five issues of the B.A.R. several years ago. In it, Ronnetttte explored the political and sexual shenanigans which occur when the rich and their servants are couped up together at summer camp. Ronnetttte found high camp, low blows, and serious wheeler-dealing as a waiter in the Bohemian Grove, and reported

To celebrate Ron's undisguised appearance as the main character in a play, The New Babylon Press has issued "A Waitress In Bohemia" as a 60-page chapbook. It's complete and illustrated, and costs $4 at The Walt Whitman Bookshop, or from The New Babylon, 41 Lafayette, San Francisco 94103

Aylesworth's play ran for more than a month last fall, and earned a Dramalogue award as "Outstanding New Script." It's back now from Feb. 13 to March 7 at the New Performance Gallery; 863-9834.

"It's about men and masculinity and wealth and power," said Ronnetttte about his essay. While Aylesworth used other source material in creating his play, Ron said, "Our territories strong responses from its different audiences. Waiters and gay men get into it, laughing at the sexual and economic foibles exposed. "But the night the Bohemian Clubbers came en masse there was no humor," Aylesworth told me. "I guess they thought they were such fun-loving guys they could take anything, but they were so hostile. It was like combat. They'd brought their wives and were unmasked, undressed, in front of them. They would have walked out, but their wives were enjoying it!"

Bluestein will read select portions of "Waitress," plus recent poetry and a chapter from his forthcoming novel, at a reading at the Walt Whitman Sunday, Feb. 22, at 8 p.m. Admission is $3; reservations suggested; 861-3078.

A third of the way through Tom Stoppard's The Real Thing at ACT, I wondered what care I could possibly have in these heterosexuals who babble on about their affairs and their infidelities. Who cared if they got it off or not? What folly.

That's exactly what I was supposed to think, as the nature of this clever play crept up about me. The Real Thing sets up various forms of reality and various codes of ethics only to tear them down so that our shifting perceptions may offer a glimpse of-the real thing.

And what is that? It's teasing, evanescent, so that every time the play seems to pin it down, it comes loose to flutter and dissolve. A truth that was only a perception, a reality that wasn't real: that's the real thing. There is much to the telling of this many-layered tale. Stoppard mounts production numbers of words that match Busby Berkeley's choreographic displays for bizarre yet convincing configurations. And after he convinces us with a dazzling display of words, he'll reveal his trick: Sophistry. Badinage. "You may have all ancers' Stage, the dayschool of classical ballet, is also one of the city's best new performance spaces. Located half a block south of Market on Brady Street, accessibility is the facility's great advantage. And, despite a few drawbacks commo to most studio spaces (inadequate wing space and depth in the house, plus something of an air circulation problem), the recently enlarged and renovated Dancers' Stage has admirable sightlines and acoustics.

Co-director Yehuda Maor, an able choreographer, has maintained the goal of presenting his students, along with guest artists, in informal performances several times a year. In his latest series, to be repeated Feb. 12-15, Maor is showing works more consciously scaled to fit the space, including a premiere choreographed by Victoria Morgan of the San Francisco Ballet and a work-inprogress by American Ballet Theatre's Martine Van Hamel. Of particular interest is Maor's new ballet, Broken Prayers, to my knowledge the first effort by a ballet choreographer to address AIDS issues directly.

The central figure in Broken Prayers is Sean O'Neil, a dancer with AIDS who has been a very active Bay Area dance journalist and is now an outspoken AIDS advocate. In a poem written by his mother, Carolyn O'Neil, and read during the performance by Damara Bennett, O'Neil is called the golden boy or dolphin boy, a symbol of youth and optimism. In his graceful opening solo, O'Neil suggests a creature of the ocean, happily exploring an environment characterized by the natural sounds of Dan Dugan's taped score. The arrival of "Life" (former San Francisco Ballet dancer Russell Murphy) and "Death" (stringently danced by Zeynep Tanbay) begins a ritual cycle to which the golden boy eventually succumbs.

Early in the piece, Life embraces the boy, shielding him from the approach of Death. "His Friends," a mixed ensemble of half a dozen dancers, represents the continuing life around the boy. Maor uses the ensemble dramatically, in a literal representation of a peer group, and abstractly, as it collectively responds to the crisis in passages of vigorous, percussive modern ballet surprisingly complementary to Bach's Passacaglia and Fuge in C Minor, to which the central section of the dance is set. There are constant shifts between the literal and astract, dramatic suggestion followed by responsive dancing. In an interesting and insightful way, the primal struggle between Life and Death is revealed as something happening apart from the golden boy, who most often observes the action from an upstage dais whose long fabric panel sweeps towards

An erotic element in the duet between Life and The Golden Boy was probably unavoidable, perhaps intentional and, in any case, altogether politically proper. O'Neil looks fragile in a beatific way, but not ill. Murphy, an all-American adonis with the warmth of a favorite brother, was perfectly cast in the role of friend/lover/alter-ego/spritual guide. The pitfalls I feared in advance of seeing the ballet were mostly avoided. There is a pose reminiscent of Michelangelo's "Pieta" and a cruciform lift toward the end of the ballet, along with some genuflectiontype bowing in the ensemble, symbols I assume Maor did not intend to be taken as liturgical references but which, in conjunction with Bach organ music and the piece's title, tend to appear so. Yet on the whole, Broken Prayers is a surprisingly sensitive reflection on some of the spiritual crises that can accompany AIDS. It was performed in a committed and positive spirit.

Other works on the program made less of an impression. Martine Van Hamel's Elusive Encounters, excerpted as a work-inber music by George Calusdian, had little going for it beyond the dancers' efforts to make it effective. In "Cigar Song," the ravishing Augusta Moore tantalized three men, spending most of her time with Horacio Cifuentes, while the two remaining was performed live by the Santa men were often left standing awkwardly in wait. The second New Time invited comparison part, "Anticipation of Love," achieved some fitful passion from its performances by Marina Hotchkiss and Russell Murphy. With her premiere, New Time, Victoria Morgan began with an interesting concept: three couples whose duets echo contrasting male-female relationships. However, despite Morgan's expressed attempt to reflect the changing nature of contemporary women's roles, the relationships shown are anything but new. In the first, an unwilling woman is dominated by a man. The second is a competitive relationship in which the dancers mirror each other's energy but seldom come together. The third sought to illustrate a romantic ideal through a dreamy, spirall ing supported duet. Sandra Woodall's white shirred and gathered costumes, like stylish mummy clothes, are similar to those she made for Morgan's 1985 ballet, On Moving On.

Robert Greenberg's orginal score with Margo Sappington's rock ballet, Weewis, which the Joffrey

Ballet has performed here. In that work, three duets with polarities similar to Morgan's were drawn with the vividness and clarity of a comic strip. The lack of theatrical power in Morgan's duets may be the result of an attempt to show the kinds of motivational nuances that are really manifested in speech rather than in gesture; few choreographers have made dances that could bear the burden of such abstractions. The presence of a large rear-projection video screen, showing closeups and alternative views of the choreography onstage, further diffused the impact.

Yehuda Maor's Dances for Augusta, to pieces by Dvorak, was a pleasantly neoclassical closer, though as evidenced by the ensemble choreography in his earlier ballet, Maor does his best composing in an earthier vein.

Reverence for the Dead is David Schein's musical tragicomedy, playing at the Blake Street Hawkeyes' studio in Berkeley, 2019 Blake St., through March. You may not understand or appreciate everything he has to offer, but he is likely to give you a new perspective and show you something different about the Schein whips up a madcap lunacy using the JFK assassination, with names changed to highlight the guilty, as a jumping-off point for commentary on violence, marriage, mother-child relationships, patriotism, politics, and public relations. In Reverence, Lee Harvey Ozball returns to his mother, and later wife, after 25 years on the lam, his death in Dallas by Jack Diamond having been faked for Ozball goes on trial, is acquitted of the killing - because too much salt in his system made him go loco - and becomes a sensation and success as the leader of a new wave band called Lee Harvey Ozball and the Assassins. In the end though, Ozball is still Ozball and he stays true to character and blows up the world.

Reverence overflows with music and songs. The lyrics, by Schein, are funny and crackle with wit and irreverence. The music is enjoyable for the most part, and Schein and J. Brody do their best work on slow-type ballads and wicked ditties. But the songs as a whole lack strong bridges and choruses that result in memorable and hummable

The dialogue, by Schein and Whoopi Goldberg, is sharp and snappy and filled with laughs. Lee asks his mother, "If I admitted to the most hellacious crime of the century, would people still like me?" His mother answers, "That depends on how you package it, son." On the surface it's funny, but as you dig deeper, the underlying currents are not.

Schein is aided by a strong cast who, for the most part, are able to be serious and straight-faced while their tongues are deeply embedded in their cheeks. Wayne Doba, missing something in Baseball Zombie and Beast of Shame, hits paydirt as Lee Harvey Ozball. He is a shy, sly, manip-

Tiptoeing Gingerly Down The Aisle

7 ith Valentine's Day just around the corner, a cherished ritual of emotional bonding will soon be observed throughout the land. For those who are either snugly or smugly secure in their monogamous relationships, the annual homage to St. Valentine will mark a tidy reaffirmation of their love. Indeed, in most domestic situations, Valentine's Day is treated as a sentimental occasion on which "happily married people" celebrate their continued commitment to each other.

For those on the make, however, Valentine's Day usually marks the start of the annual race to snag a new husband; a signal - not unlike Ground Hog Day that the time has come to commence the business of spring wooing. Last, but not least, for those who sell Valentine's cards and other related memorabilia, this holiday is looked upon as a time to fondle the cash register with unrestrained glee.

While it's all very well to care enough to send the very best, a steady barrage of cute cards, comfy condoms, and clean underwear (coyly decorated with little red hearts) cannot guarantee that any prospective relationship will end up being cemented in the cosmos. Although our society is rooted in the concept of instant gratification, old-fashioned courting takes time. What's more, there are no guarantees that the process will yield the desired results.

In recent years, the renaissance of same-sex courting rituals has seen many gay men attempt to take on new lovers in the false hope that their suddenly acquired monogamous status would protect them from the threat of contracting AIDS. Although the sadder-but-wiser girls around town have patiently endured a rash of these shotgun weddings, many of us have also stood by and watched with a sense of wry amusement as these relationships have subsequently fallen apart. The reason for their

Perhaps that's why dumb virgins with high expectations the ones who become easily rattled when their bridegrooms get distracted - must constantly depend on clever ruses in order to recapture their men's attention. They casually go bonkers and wait for the chorus

> With or without her marbles intact, Dame Joan Sutherland's recent appearance as Elvira (timed to celebrate the 25th anniversary of the Australian soprano's Metropolitan Opera debut) was cause for celebration. A grandmother twice over, Sutherland is still performing bel canto wonders onstage. The woman has become the opera world's answer to Mount Rushmore and, although certain musical passages were lowered a half tone, can still negotiate Bellini's score with a strength and security to be envied by any other coloratura soprano. The movies may have used the same plot in a more innocent age, with a male investigator eliminating the intriguing lesbian overtones, and it probably worked then too. Director Bob Rafelson has given us an expensivelooking, exciting page-turner of a movie. I especially liked screenwriter Ronald Bass' original twist on the obligatory explanation of the murderer's motivation. (Metro, Stonestown, Grand Lake, Century Plaza)

DYING TO ACT

You may wonder what attracted a director like Arthur Penn to the standard thriller elements of Dead of Winter. If the material isn't worthy of him, the results are - almost. As The Bedroom Window played with tricks the other film missed.

Mary Steenburgen plays a naive New York actress brought to a remote house upstate, supposedly to audition for a film role she's dying to get. (Oops.) It takes her a couple of days to notice the strangeness of "producer" Jan Rubevs and Roddy McDowall, his assistant, former patient and perhaps lover. As they play chess she realizes she is a pawn — but in what game she doesn't know.

Obviously the stakes are high. We've already seen a woman murdered in her car for a briefcase full of money.

Despite the talents involved and Steenburgen might have had more fun with her multiple role than she does - the material frequently hovers inches above the level of a Halloween-type slasher movie, giving you a good-but-not-great scare. (Presidio, Century

SCHRADER FOX UP

Light of Day is going to hit close to home for a lot of young people, especially if they live in reland. Gays with problems coming out to their parents may relate to Michael J. Fox and Joan Jett. They're not gay, but they're rock and rollers with a band called the Barbusters, and that's no better in the eyes of their mom (Gena Rowlands). When dad (Jason Miller) says "I can't complain," you know he means it.

Jett's tendency toward "creative borrowing" leads to a confusing plot twist where Fox goes into debt to cover a theft instead of getting her to return what she stole. Jett also has a young child who gets caught in a three-way tug-of-war. Her final confrontation with Rowlands trivializes the film's major questions of faith with ambiguous results. The failure to mention drugs in the rock scene hurts the credibility established by such clever lines as one about a band's name change: "They used to be called Sins. Now they're just Problems."

Writer-director Paul Schrader (Mishima) misses enough beats that, as Jett says in another context, "Nothing comes together . . just moments." A music video director would have done better by Schrader's script.

Fox pretty much wimps out in attempting to move from light to light-heavyweight as an actor. He cavorts innocently in a bathtub with a naked five-year-old boy in the prelude to one of the film's best scenes. Schrader's camera tends to home in on Fox's crotch, although there doesn't appear to be anything there. Jett, who looks like a prettier Liza Minnelli, makes the best impression of anyone in the cast - even Rowlands, who delivers a caricature of her better performances.

A good idea gone bad, this movie never should have seen the light of day. (Alexandria, Empire, Serramonte)

he whole state of California seemed to be blessed with great weather last weekend. Temperatures in the low 70s prevailed here in Mecca while Southern California basked in 90° weather causing hundreds of thousands to flock to the beaches there. Venice Beach seemed to be the main choice. The City of the Angeles was jumping all over the place. A horde of San Franciscans converged down there for the crowning of the new Rex of the Oedipus M/C. But alas, his majesty suffered an appendix disorder and was unable to appear at his own coronation. Not to worry! The event did go on with our own Bobby Wong, (a former Rex himself) stealing the show. It all happened Saturday night, Feb. 7 at Ukrainian Hall.

The next day, the Constantines M/C of San Francisco hosted a humongous beer bust at the Gauntlet II. Needless to say, it was SRO all afternoon with a good turnout. The Gauntlet II, under the supervision of Bob Linsley, is still the Number One leather bar in Los Angeles. A few steps up the street, the Detour still commands a legion of loyal customers. And over on Hoover, the One Way doesn't seem to be losing its appeal. The newest eatery there is "Legends" on Hollywood Blvd. If you get a chance drop in and say hi to Zel the Matriarch of the place, and try their fabulous Steak and Eggs brunch for a mere $4.10.

Saturday, the Cal Eagles M/C celebrated its Third Anniversary early in the evening in the patio of the S.F.-Eagle. Phil Smith received a commendation from Supervisor John Molinari, and a big turnout was on hand with lots and lots of flowers decorating the place. All photographers are advised to get their prints in for consideration by the Cable Car Awards Board of Directors no later than Monday, 16 Feb. Drop them off to my attention at B.A.R. by 1700 hours. This is the absolute deadline for photo journalism entries which were published during 1986; art photos in color are due the same time. Hurry!

o what's in store for your leisure hours in the next few days? Tonight, Thursday, Feb. 12, the G.G. Performing Arts and the Gay Men's Chorus are having a reception at Ivy's (398 Hayes) from 2000 to 2200 honoring their big benefit concert on March 5 with Charles Pierce and Barbara Cook at Davies Hall.

If you just happen to be in Detroit, the new Detroit Eagle opens tonight there. It's at 1501 Holden St., so next time you're in Motown drop in and say hi to owners Fred and Chuck.

Friday seems to be a free-forall wherever you may wander and Saturday, Feb. 14 is the Troc's annual Red Party. They're having an Erotic Red party at the Endup with $300 in cash for 1st prize (it must be erotic and it must be red), $200 for 2nd place, and $100 for 3rd place. The J/O Buddies are having their "Get A Heart On" party (doors open 2100 to 2300) for $10.

The Saddle Tramps are having a hoedown at the Rawhide Sun day, Feb. 15 from 1700 to 2100. There's a big leather/uniform/levi party at Craig Amaral (Dildeaux Award winner) and Richard Rollins' digs in San Pablo (by invitation only) Saturday night

Monday, 16 Feb., is the dinner at the Warehouse ($50 donation) for the AIDS Emergency Fund kickoff for 1987 with Sharon McNight entertaining and Danny Williams MCing. Don't miss it! Across town also on Monday, the SF Jacks are having their Patriotic Prophylactics Night at 260 Shotwell and Sunday, Feb. 22, The 15 Association (hot new 1987 calendar!) are celebrating their 7th Anniversary also at 260

Contest in Chicago in May. The title, Mr. Leather of S.F., begins competition Wednesday, March 18, at the S.F. Eagle. There will be three contests (March 18, 25, and April 1) with the winner being picked Wednesday, April 8. The winner will get $500 in cash, round-trip air fare to Chicago, hotel accommodations and a chance at the big title on Memorial Day weekend. The judges will remain the same throughout the competition, and at my deadline it looks like Patrick Batt (who will be a judge in Chicago this year), Jim Ed Thompson, Herb Hebron, Nick Veratakis, and Allen Selby, will wield the judging pens. THE DISH RUNS AMUCK WITH THE SPOON

Joe Altman left us some few months ago to become the staff photographer on the Territorial Enterprise, a Virginia City, Nevada weekly founded by Mark Twain. Joe will be showing a lot of his work in a photo show which opens Feb. 14 at the Five Star Saloon in Reno. The show runs through March 14 and you'll see a lot of familiar faces (and bodies) in the show. The reception is this Saturday, 14 Feb, beginning at 2000 hours if you're in the neighborhood. The invitations with a sexy shot of Patrick Toner is to die over!

And speaking of sexy shots to die over, the Gauntlet II Men calendar for 1987 is pretty hot too. All photos were taken by John Krause, a former S.F. resident. They're only $5 if you care to indulge. I don't know what happened to the Gay Paper but the publishing business is precarious. I got a notice in the mail offering the Women's Press for sale. According to the offer, the business is doing $300,000 annually. And they want to sell it?

Since Valentine's Day is just around the corner, hope you'll (Continued on next page

If you never saw the pandemonium of teddy bears in the vindow of Vic Davis' manse in PacHts, you can see them all at Teddy Bears, the hot new bar/restaurant/lounge at 131 Gough. There are only 2600 of them, so get over there and quick! They're on display in the (what else?) Teddy Bear Lounge!

Another landmark down the tubes, to wit: Due to a huge rent increase, Sukker's Likkers on Polk will close down putting the staff out of work, so expect to see Mark "Blond Hussy"; Austin socializing more than ever! They'll probably open another fast-food dump on the site.

And who cares if Secretary of State Shultz has a tiger tattooed on his posterior? Have you seen the face that protects it? Just because he went to Princeton should be reason enough for him to be exempt from full disclosure! Harrumph!

And speaking of disclosure, the Mr. June 1988 winner at the Endup's Calendar contest last Thursday was uproarious! A down-to-earth leathery type finalwon in the person of Brian Alvarez, who wowed the audience and judges alike to grab the title for the 1988 calendar. The first runner-up was Tom Napalan, Jr., followed by Waukeen McCoy, who helped make the entire evening a fun, fun time. Check out Mr. Pruzananadana's photos of last Thursday's winners!

Pool Association's 18th season, set to begin Tuesday, Feb. 10.

Among the eight-team increase over last season are four new women's teams. New sponsors include Amelia's, Sophia's, and Folsom New World. Returning after a hiatus are the Castro Station, Eagle Creek, and the White Swallow. A complete list of teams will be published each week as the season progresses.

Walter Moreira and Bobbie Kenney teamed up to win the Hi-Lo, for many seasons the league's most popular tournament. The victory was especially thrilling for Bobbie, having culminated her first SFPA season.

Nineteen prospective captains participated in the pre-season Captains Tournament at Park Bowl. Jim Russo, a veteran player who'll be a first-time captain at Thirty-two teams have lined up at the Inside Out this season, was at the starting gate to the S.F. undefeated. Rick Mariani finundefeated. Rick Mariani finished second, Dick Glass third,

The Cable Car Awards are coming up Feb. 28. SFPA nominees include League President Donna Blow for Contribution to Sports; E.Z., Rick Bradford, and Tim Chitwood for Sportsman of the Year; and Lisa Duncan, Barbara Steel, and Lauren Ward for Sportswoman of the Year. The SFPA Board of Directors wishes to extend its warmest welcome to all new and returning sponsors and members. Although the league has developed a reputation for serious competition, the priorities remain sportsmanship, socializing, camaraderie, and promoting the enjoyment of our fascinating sport.

BOWLING

Bowling's Best

by Jerry R. De Young

If you've been watching the Professional Bowlers' Tour on Channel 7, Saturdays at 3 p.m., on Jan. 31 you shared in the intense excitement of witnessing Pete McCordic of Houston, TX achieve the first nationally televised 300 game in 15 years. Pete's perfect 12-strike series, achieved at the Greater Los Angeles Open in Torrence, CA qualifies him as the fourth bowler, and the second Houstonian, to realize this elusive goal since televising of the Pro-Bowlers' Tour began 45 years ago. Immediately following the game, while the spectators wildly applauded, the $100,000 perfectgame check was presented to Pete's wife.

The Pro-Bowlers' Tour on Saturday afternoons not only offers March 1. The Singles and Douthe opportunity to view the best bles events are scheduled for competitiors in the sport, it also March 13-15 at Castle Lanes provides invaluable advice on near the Cow Palace. Of course, professionals are not the only bowlers who have avid supporters. For instance, Rita, manager of the Ram's Head Bar, came out to Park Bowl on the evening of the 4th to inspect and inspire her intrepid crew to new plateaus of achievement. Did it work? You bet your best black beauty it did! There are some pretty sensational bowling events still waiting in the wings. One is the Annual SFBA Citywide Tournament that will commence at the end of this month and continue through to mid-March. The gay teams segment will be held at Park Bowl

A knockout social extravaganza that includes the sport of bowling is this year's Cable Car Awards ceremony to be held at the Giftcenter Feb. 28. There were 13 nominations for Bes Bowler of the Year. The three finalists from whom the BBY will be chosen are: John Games, Mal Garcia, and Tom Sipple. McKellan goes on to cite various groups, including gardeners, who have emphasized a particular aspect of the Bard's work to claim him as one of their own. He neglects to mention that his own one-man show, Ian McKellan Acting Shakespeare, presents the playwright as a man of the theater.

Homosexuality was less of an issue in Shakespeare's time than it is today, McKellan says. "King James I, who succeeded Elizabeth, was openly gay. I don't think it was until the 1890s that they bothered to pass a law against men having sex with each other. And then it never crossed the minds of the men of parliament to outlaw lesbianism. It just never occurred to them that women might do that."

One of McKellan's most acclaimed roles - and they are numerous in a career which has spanned almost 30 years - was of another gay king, in Marlowe's Edward II. It was first produced in 1592 and last in 1911 until McKellan's 1969 revival, which shocked that year's Edinburgh

The actor believes the show was helped by publicity from religious leaders who objected to what they saw in one of their church buildings, which was used as a festival theater. "They were a little upset to see buggery, sodomy, and violence of various sorts being committed in the middle of that church, but I think that only helped give the production some notoriety and therefore financial success.'

The play's best-known scene is the ending, where the king is executed by the insertion of a red-hot poker where the sun, as they say, don't shine. In the 1911 production, McKellan says, this was played behind a curtain and left to the audience's imagination. It is, however, historically accurate, and was staged rather graphically and openly in his version, which was shown here on PBS. "At that point," he laughs, "all the men in the audience crossed their legs and all the women leaned forward."

McKellan calls Edward "one of my favorite parts . . . just a man who had no love in his life, except for a beautiful boy." It was the nationality, not the gender of the king's lover, Piers Gaveston, that people objected to in the play, the actor says. "No one complains about Edward knocking about with a man, but because he's French." He thinks the role should be played by a black actor to make the point for modern au-

There is a substantial amount of talent and creative wizardry in this troupe. When it hits the mark, it is as good, funny, and magical as theater can get. When it misses, it does so spectacularly. But there are enough high points to make this a show worth

Elsewhere in the cast, Rockwell Blake's Arturo was a sensitively etched performance. Indeed, the tenor shaped his phrases with a true sense of bel canto, sounding quite magnificent in the process. Brent Ellis's Riccardo and Julien Robbins Giorgio offered stock portrayals which were serviceably rather than excitingly sung.

TAKE MY BRIDE, PLEASE

While Elvira's nuptials are complicated by warring political factions. Marenka's wedding to her beloved Jenik is nearly throttled by her family's blind desire to see their daughter married to a wealthy man and honor a long-forgotten promise to the village marriage broker. Although the details of such marital intrigue are too complicated to unravel in this column, Smetana's The Bartered Bride contains as many plot twists as any Gilbert & Sullivan operetta or Shakespearean play. The Czech composer's score is nothing to sneeze at, either.

Last year, while in London, I finally had a chance to see this work performed in an immensely satisfying production at the English National Opera. While Angela Feeney's Marenka and John Treleaven's Jenik were solidly sung, I found myself far more intrigued by Alan Woodrow's work as the simple-minded Vasek. Richard van Allen sang the role of the meddling Kecal while Malcolm Rivers appeared as the henpecked Micha.

Elijah Moshinsky's production (restaged here by David Ritch) benefited handsomely from John Bury's appealingly rural designs and the hijinks of the traveling circus which enlists Vasek's services as part of Act III's merriment. Because London's musical scene is so much more competitive than our own, I found it especially interesting to notice that posters for the English National Opera's season - with circus scenes from The Bartered Bride making one imagine that ENO was advertising something quite different than opera were plastered all over London's underground mass transit. These posters say something very important about arts marketing if you want to reach the general public, you have to meet them on their own grounds - and I wish more American opera companies would get the message!

(Continued from page 31) Hardy-like team of Czech mates. Otik (Janos Ban) is an endearing simpleton who's been protected for five years by Pavek (Marian Labuda), who is tired of it. As Pavek threatens to withdraw his support, a scheme is afoot to have Otik transferred to Prague because someone covets his house. Sub-plots involve adultery and a teenage crush, the old village doctor and a smoker with a more dangerous habit than most.

Everything is neatly resolved in the end, but this is a Sweet Little Village Menzel can easily return to whenever he wants to make another delightful film. You may want to pay a return visit as well. There's rarely been a movie that's harder to dislike. (Lumiere)

LEGAL EAGLET

From the Hip opens in a time warp. Even though an unmarried man and woman are sharing a bed, their language - and everyone else's - is so sanitized it's as if the '60s never happened. Finally young lawyer Judd Nelson gets to defend his first client in court and fights with judge Ray Walston over the admissibility of the word "asshole." That's as incredible as the client, a bank president, seeking publicity on the battery charge to which he admits his guilt, but at least it starts people speaking more

It also turns the film in a more serious direction, though not without further humorous hiiinks and courtroom flamboyance, as suddenly famous Nelson is hired to defend John Hurt in a murder trial. Hurt is wealthy, brilliant, and quite possibly guil-- "sort of a cross between Charles Manson and William Buckley," as the simile-laden screenplay puts it. His young attorney has a crisis of conscience, as they apparently never taught him at Harvard he might have to defend guilty people.

Hurt's sensational performance soars above the material and occasionally carries Nelson with it. Elizabeth Perkins, terrific in About Last Night. . ., is wasted as Nelson's devoted lover.

Lest we forget director Bob Clark also made Porky's, he has Nelson do things like scraping his fingers on a chalkboard and planting a vibrator in an opposing attorney's briefcase.

From the Hip is a mildly entertaining yuppie fantasy which

917 Folsom at 5th

tries to make serious points about the American system of justice by trivializing it. (Alexandria)

After Judd Nelson told Joan Rivers how he had "climbed the Marlboro man sign on Sunset Boulevard," a follow-up question appears in order: "Judd, do you often get the urge to mount strange men?"

"I'm a good climber," he replies laughing. "As a kid, in the backvard, climbing trees - in Maine, that's all you have. But that was a sign. I didn't think of it as mounting a man. I don't get the urge to do that."

After The Breakfast Club the 27-year-old actor stopped seeing his own films. "What interests me is the process, not the result I prefer not to put myself in the audience as an actor. I'll be in the audience to see other actors, but

Internalizing is part of Nelson's process. "If you don't take anything in," he believes, "you don't give anything away (to the audience). Then it's the Judd Nelson Show, and I don't do that. Except late at night."

Viewers will find the flamboyant antics he gets away with in From the Hip incredible, but Nelson says, "It depends on the judge" what is allowed in a courtroom. "I spent two months in Boston prepping. I saw a judge fall asleep face down on the bench while the defendant was on the stand in a rape case!" He details other atrocities he witnessed, and his film begins to seem tame by comparison.

When From the Hip plays on television, what will happen to Nelson's confrontation with the judge over the use of the word asshole," which the young lawyer wins by citing literary precedents? The actor says he doesn't know, but he hopes things will loosen up by the time the movie airs: "Reagan will be gone by then, we'll have a Democrat in the White House, Meese will have taken a bullet in the brain; so maybe we'll be able to say "ass-

Speculating further on the film's choice of words, Nelson, getting punchy by this time, rambles, "They couldn't use the big M-F word or the big C-S word because Hemingway and D.H. Lawrence didn't use them. Hemingway was a C-S."

Stronger, though, is the fact that Stoppard's subterfuges are the means he uses to mean something. His facile wit is the tool of a mind which can reveal instead of breach. His play is a descendant of Shaw's Disquisitory Plays, which generally bore subtitles such as "A Debate in One Sitting," or "A Conversation." Unlike Shaw, who was blasted for lack of form and plotlessness, Stoppard has a revealing circular form and a strong plot-the union of a disparate couple—in which he confidently houses his meandering disquisitions. He's achieved a contemporary Discussion Play, a farce of ideas right in line with Shaw. These days, that's

This most fascinating new play in years has not, unfortunately, been given a fascinating production. The ACT approachs, including a post-modernist set and "actory" direction by Edward Hastings, underscores the play's artifice. This cools the play; the more realistic New York production evoked a more fervent response from its audience. Still, this is an appreciable production, one that will deepen with repetition. Mark Harelik, a big bear of a man with adorably boyish dimples, is eloquent and strong as Henry, and he's surrounded by a capable cast—the brittle Fredi Olster, youthful Margaret Klenck as the visibly growing Annie, and impish Rick Hamilton as her ex-

In The Real Thing Stoppard conjures illusion to remark on reality. This is not, as it first seems, a play about marriage, but a play about knowing and being known by others. It's quite affecting, remarkably witty, and wisely sophisticated. If the current production hasn't brought its characters to warmest life, I still fondly remember and recommend their words and perceptions. Through March 6; 673-

'Sadly, our refusal to leave the 'bed area' may result in an unjustifiable arrest. If that occurs, we ask all members, supporters and friends of the Vigil to respond in a spirit of determined

non-violence.'

Feds Threaten, But Vigil Stays

by Allen White

The federal government has begun its plan to rid itself of the ARC/AIDS Vigil by Feb. 27. A refurbishing effort in the lobby adjacent to the Vigil will be completed by then and the government plans to re-open doors that have not been used since the Vigil began in October, 1985.

The first move was made last week by Federal Building Security Director John Johnson when he made a verbal request to the Vigil members. He told protesters he wanted two beds which have been chained to the building's doors removed. They were given a copy of federal law which specifies that a six-foot strip in front of the building is off limits. Violation of the code carries a 30-day jail sentence and a fine.

The vigilers hold their ground.

Today

Two Faithed: The Fairies, with their spiritual smorgasbord of paganism and camp, now have a place to call home. They've purchased an 80-acre farm in Oregon. Brian Jones reports, page 14.

Band Plays On: With their appearance in the recent Chinese New Year's Parade, the San Francisco Gay Freedom Day Marching Band & Twirling Corps kicks off its tenth year. See page 5.

Isolated: That's what the San Jose Police Dept. has been called in a new report on gay community-police relations, see page 3.

Moral Courage: And the lack of it are portrayed in the S.F. Repertory Theatre's long awaited production of Martin Sherman's play Bent. See page 36.

Pickup Leads To Double Slaying

Police Investigating Link to 16 Unsolved Homicides

by Ray O'Loughlin

Homicide inspectors discovered what has become a too familiar scenario lately in San Francisco in investigating a double slaying that occurred Monday in a posh South of Market apartment complex.

Apparently, one of the victims, Ronaldo Ricardo de Ellis, brought home a man he'd met, possibly in a nearby bar. Twenty minutes later, dying from stab wounds, he called 911, saying, "Someone's trying to kill me."

Police are investigating the possibility of a serial killer responsible for some of the 16 unsolved murders. But at present, they have no leads.

When police responded, they found de Ellis and another man, both dead from multiple knife wounds. Both were nude.

"They killed each other,
there's no question about that,"
said Inspector Ed Erdelatz. "It

Pierce Keeps Job Despite Remark to 'Machine Gun' Gays

Senate Votes 28-4 to Confirm Duke's Nominee for DMV Director

by Brian Jones

Just hours away from losing his job, A.A. "Del" Pierce won confirmation from the California Senate last week. The Senate voted 28-4 to confirm Pierce as director of the Department of Motor Vehicles (DMV), despite sworn testimony that Pierce once "joked" about shooting gay people.
