Living, Loving and AIDS

In my passion the "dark and haunting alien from the shadows" found its passion — my young, healthy T-cells. More than five years later, on Valentine's Day of 1986, the doctors gently informed me of what their tests confirmed — AIDS. The nightmare had begun before the proof. I knew my life force was being zapped. Bounding up a flight of stairs was a thing of the past. I would wake up tired after eight hours of sleep. The night sweats would make me shift to the other side of the bed. I knew my youth and vigor had a steady leak, but telling myself that I was no longer a spring chicken seemed to put off what I was refusing to believe. After all, this was how all healthy 33-year-olds felt.

A severe case of the shingles struck me around Thanksgiving and after that my first two KS lesions appeared. The results of the biopsy officially began my reality and brought life as I knew it to a complete halt.

I am now somebody else as I lie here in General Hospital on the AIDS Ward writing this, and I sure do miss the person I used to be.

There are no words to express the horror of all of this. Its weight is unbearable but bear it we must. The tears overflowed from a place I didn't know existed and courage appears that I didn't know I had. I don't cry as much or as hard as I used to. It's amazing what you can adjust to. Now instead of waking up crying (was I crying in my sleep??) and thinking "Oh God, I'm going to die!" I now wake up and think, "Yea! I'm still here!" I still feel that way, even now as I'm being treated to arrest the retinitis that would quickly blind me without treatment. Somehow I'm grateful that I only have what I have — it could be worse.

The "NOW" is the only place I exist in with my happy memories and hopes and prayers for tomorrow. The love and concern that others have shown is all that has made this bearable. All petty worries of the past disappear and you wake up to the truth that the only thing that really matters is love. So, two days after my diagnosis, I wrote the lyrics to a song in my head called "Love is All that Matters." I pray that I can reach the public and plead with you to please run to the side of anyone, friend or stranger, who has been given news of a shorter life span. Love is the only thing bigger than anything — even death.

Also, I beg everyone to please take care of your bodies. Don't abuse your temple, especially if you are HTLV-3 positive. Stress reduction is extremely important, as is a healthy diet and plenty of sleep. For the life of you and your partner, safe sex must be the only kind of sex you practice. We have no other choice.

Please tell those you love that you love them. Fate can't be taken for granted. Go visit a friend or even a stranger in the hospital. You are all we have to make this journey easier. Don't forget to contribute to the AIDS Foundation Food Bank. The need is ever-increasing. Go peacefully, with love in your heart, a smile in your soul and always count your blessings. The old saying is still true: "If life don't hand you nothing but lemons, then you just make yourself some lemonade."

The LaRouche Initiative: Airport Hawking Comes to AIDS in California

Lyndon LaRouche is indeed an odd duck. He is philosophically inconsistent, basing his actions on political expediency or changing public opinion. He cynically manipulates issues to create the perception that his organization, the "National Democratic Policy Committee," is something more than a band of displaced, albeit creative, lunatics. His anti-drug, pro-nuclear, anti-Soviet or pro-union efforts, meant to appeal to Republicans and Democrats, conservatives and liberals, or Soviets and Americans, all simultaneously, clearly demonstrate the chameleon-like nature of LaRouche and his many phony fronts. He is paranoid; seldom, if ever, seen in public for fear of "Soviet-backed terrorists," while describing himself as a "Trotskyite" or "America's Lenin." He is not exactly conservative; he advocates nationalizing the U.S. steel industry. But he is certainly no leftist, calling Henry Kissinger "an agent of influence for the Soviet Union," and urging that we "feed Jane Fonda to the whales." While calling himself a Democrat, prompting the Chairman of the Democratic Party, Chuck Manatt, to disavow him and his followers as "a fanatical cult," his devotees appeal to Republican business leaders in favoring economic growth in opposition to Ralph Nader and the "eco-freaks who threaten the growth of U.S. industry."

In short, LaRouche and his stormtroopers are a scam. Unfortunately, they know how to read public opinion surveys.

No sooner had the Los Angeles Times featured a poll showing that large numbers of Americans support strong government action in the fight against AIDS (to the extent that more than half the adults support quarantining AIDS patients) than LaRouche introduced an initiative requiring state and local health officials to exercise their most strident emergency powers on people with AIDS, people simply infected with the virus, and in most cases, even those people suspected of having been infected.

Couching their false propaganda in "expert opinion," LaRouche manipulates facts, exaggerates and lies to exploit the fear associated with AIDS. Confusingly (and confusedly) likening it to casually transmitted diseases, LaRouche hysterically blames a "supranational" conspiracy for "falsifying facts about AIDS."

One of the great strengths of this nation is that anyone with a point of view may be heard. Lyndon LaRouche is a sad example of the concept taken to an extreme in exploiting this tragedy for his personal and political profit.

According to an American Civil Liberties Union analysis of the initiative, the following legal consequences can be expected if the LaRouche initiative qualifies and passes (particular credit should be given to Randall G. Wick, Esq., President, Orange County Chapter, ACLU of Southern California):

- Reporting of names to local health authorities of persons with AIDS and those exposed to HTLV-3 and even persons suspected of having AIDS or having been infected with HTLV-3 (probably including antibody test results) will be required of physicians and others not currently required to report. Some public health officials might be pressured to investigate each person reported.

- Food handlers such as cooks, waiters, airline attendants and possibly bartenders will be prevented from working with food if they are even suspected of having been exposed to HTLV-3 or of having AIDS.

- School exclusion will probably be required for students and staff who may have been exposed to HTLV-3, who have AIDS, or conceivably even merely reside with someone who has been infected with HTLV-3 or a person with AIDS.

- Travel restrictions might be asserted by law enforcement or public health officials against those infected by HTLV-3 or a person with AIDS.

- Quarantine and isolation powers might be more readily used by law enforcement and public health officials against those having been exposed to HTLV-3 and persons with AIDS.

Clearly, the substance and precedent established by this initiative make it truly irresponsible and dangerous. Sadly, in the absence of having a rational point of view presented, many people may believe LaRouche's drivel. Therefore, we as a community must unite to supplement our already substantial civic and political response to the AIDS crisis in preparing for the eventuality of having to mount a campaign of historic proportions against this preposterous initiative.

Individuals and organizations interested in taking the lead in their community should write: Beating LaRouche, 7985 Santa Monica Blvd., Suite 109-251, Los Angeles 90046-5112.

East Bay Food Bank

I would like to bring to the attention of your readers that, like the San Francisco AIDS Foundation, there is another Food Bank located in the East Bay at the Pacific Center AIDS Project.

The Pacific Center AIDS Project has been helping people with AIDS and people with ARC who live in the East Bay.

While there has been a lot of help in San Francisco, the East Bay has responded too. However, because of the ever-growing numbers of newly diagnosed people, your contributions are needed more than ever.

I urge all of your readers to support their neighborhood AIDS organizations in the Bay Area. Because of your support in the past, we have done more than any community nationwide. Please continue that support.

If you would like more information on the Pacific Center AIDS Project or the Food Bank, please call 420-8181.

Again I'd like to thank all of you for your ongoing support to your community.

Federal Budget Priorities

Reagan's proposed budget has raised the hackles of more people than simply those who oppose his defense spending and Contra aid. Thanks to a lot of hard work by people concerned about the welfare of lab animals, and some very dear representatives and senators (including our own from California), a bill to improve one of the only federal animal protection laws, the Animal Welfare Act, passed. Now, because of the new standards, millions of laboratory animals should receive better treatment in the next year, including painkillers, pre- and post-surgical care and inspections by mandatory animal care committees to make sure that they are not being neglected or mistreated.

But they won't. Reagan wants to cut all funding of the Animal Welfare Act, leaving $0 to enforce its regulations. Millions of animals, not just in labs but in zoos, circuses, puppy mills and aquariums, will not even be assured routine inspections to see that they have clean food and water! Without funding, the Animal Welfare Act and the new improved standards for lab animals will be totally meaningless.

Even worse is that Reagan has money to spend on animals — $10 million, to be exact. While millions of lab and other animals will not even be assured a cursory check, ten million dollars will be spent on predator-control programs to kill over 100,000 eagles, hawks, owls, bobcats, foxes, badgers and bears in the ludicrous name of wildlife management.

Anyone who is infuriated over these funding proposals is urged to contact the federal Agriculture Appropriations Committees and protest the millions of dollars that will be spent slaughtering wildlife while exactly zero will be spent ensuring the welfare of domestic, captive and lab animals nationwide.

Call for Lesbian/Gay Community to Attend SF School Superintendent Interviews

This letter is to inform you of a series of interviews being conducted by the San Francisco Unified School District to locate a new superintendent to replace Acting Superintendent Carlos Comejo. This process will be open to the public during the week of April 7 through April 11 from 4:00-6:00 p.m. The interviews will be held in the Board of Education Office, Room 209 of the San Francisco Unified School District Building at 135 Van Ness Avenue. Anyone interested in these interviews should call Mary Martin, administrative assistant in public information and school operations, at 565-9411 or 565-9412.

The public will not be allowed to make any statements or ask questions of the candidates. It is crucial, however, that the gay and lesbian community be represented at these interviews to demonstrate our concern and to monitor how candidates respond to questions. The superintendent will be a major force in charting the course for the San Francisco Public Schools for years to come. If we hope to further the rights of sexual minority youth and create a supportive school environment for sexual minority students and teachers alike, we should not miss this opportunity. The new superintendent should be an individual who demonstrates an awareness of and commitment to address sexual minority issues.

The Lesbian Experience

How sad, but really more, how unjust that one lesbian would put into writing her own fears and experiences to put down our lesbian culture as a whole [Coming Up!, February 1986; "Lesbian Divorce: the Shady Side of Valentine," by Z. Budapest]. Thank the ways of loving that we do have as lesbians that make her generalizations just that.

The statement that "no wonder so many lesbians turn to men" I'm afraid sounds like a personal admission. Not all of us are into being victims of love gone sour.

An Open Letter to the Mayor on Bathhouses

Words cannot convey the anger I feel in learning that the City of San Francisco has once again sent private investigators into the city's gay bathhouses to spy on the legal sexual activity of gay men. This occurred in spite of the fact that your own city health commission voted never again to allow private investigators to be hired for that purpose, and that all inspections were to be done by the city's own health inspectors. While it is not yet clear whether the hiring of private investigators was done in violation of the health commission's order, it is clear that it was done in gross disregard of community feeling on the matter, and that it was done in secrecy and without consultation with any of the city's lesbian and gay representatives.

If such procedures are not to be done in a democratic and publicly open way, then what is the hope for the democratic process? If the city government can actively flout the will of city commissioners, then how can we hope to have any influence on the conducting of city government? I hold your office totally to blame for this rank disregard of city policy, and further ask that a complete investigation be done on the matter, with disciplinary action to affect those who have disregarded city policy.

Not Queer

I was happy that Coming Up! wanted to do a story on me concerning my recent success with a dance single and my music production company ("MJ Lallo," by Hildie Kraus, Coming Up!, March 1986). However I was totally appalled by the writer beginning her story about me with, "MJ Lallo... she is queer..." If you were talking about "queer-bashing" I can see using the word, but not to define a professional person. It has nothing to do with my company, or my success in music. And usually that word is used by the straight community toward us in disdain. The article focuses on me being a lesbian rather than my struggle as a composer/producer fighting it out for work in the "good ole boy network."

When I spoke with the writer, her feeling was that it was okay to call another "queer" a "queer," just as the word "nigger" is okay between members of the black community. I very strongly disagree, when it comes to professional journalism. Or would you really expect to see an article Ebony magazine about Quincy Jones, where the black reporter began the article with "Quincy Jones: he is a nigger." Think about it! I hope my Letter To the Editor can contribute to elevating the standards of your journalism and can raise some consciousness about how we plan to describe ourselves to each other and to the world.

Sincerely
MJ Lallo

Kim Corsaro replies: First off, I'd like to correct three unfortunate factual errors in last month's article on MJ Lallo, as she requested: (1) Lallo's record "Dance" is a 12" single, not an EP as reported; (2) she scored pieces for Lilith, the theatre group, not for Lilith, a Boston-based women's band, and (3) Jo-Lo was described as a "European dance musician" and is, in fact, a local duo. Apologies for these errors.

I do not, however, apologize for the use of the word "queer." The full context of that quote reads: "MJ Lallo is a peculiarly California blend: she is queer, has gone from being a starving poet to composing high-tech music, supplements her income with psychometry (a psychic faculty), and is a transplant from Denver." I think writer Hildie Kraus' choice of words was perfect in that context. I'd also like to point out that the analogy to the use of the word "nigger" is Lallo's, not Kraus'.

"Queer" is used by lesbians and gay men much like "faggot" and "dyke," in what I see as very positive ways. It's not as if these descriptions vanish when we're talking about a "professional" person. Maybe you feel like you've outgrown your gay roots, Lallo, but from our point of view we ran your story as one of our "Local Queer Makes Good" features.

CATHARTIC COMICS

Featuring
THE BROWN BOMBER & DIVA TOUCHÉ FLAMBÉ

The Rupe Group Graphics

In an unprecedented show of unity, San Francisco's Community Partnership, a broad-based coalition of political and professional organizations in the gay community, announced a boycott of television station KQED, the local Public Broadcasting System (PBS) affiliate. The boycott has been called to protest KQED's decision to air a documentary on Fabian Bridges, a person with AIDS, despite widespread community petition to the station to pull it as an extremely dangerous piece of homophobic propaganda. The March 25 nationally-broadcast Frontline show, entitled "AIDS: A National Inquiry," included the Bridges documentary, which portrays him as a male prostitute who recklessly spreads the AIDS virus to the communities in which he lives. [See sidebar] The film was followed by a panel discussion about AIDS.

The boycott called for by the Partnership asks people in the gay community to withhold pledge money they have committed to KQED, and to refrain from making further pledges until the station meets their basic demands. The Partnership wants an investigation into how the documentary ever made it on the air in the first place, after it was widely condemned for not meeting basic ethical journalistic standards, and also wants KQED to produce programming that is as positive as Fabian Bridges was negative in its dealing with the AIDS crisis.

Chris Bowman, president of Concerned Republicans for Individual Rights (CRIR) insisted, "We are not arguing against free speech, but this program presents a clear and present danger to the rights of gay people in this country. The damage has already been done. The homophobes will use clips of this piece for their own purposes." The fear is that the documentary could be particularly effective to press for quarantine legislation and curtailment of the civil liberties of people who test positive for the AIDS antibody. Bowman warned that laws being proposed in California and elsewhere in the nation will be much harder to fight as a result of Frontline.

The Community Partnership works with the San Francisco AIDS Foundation to coordinate activities in the fight against the disease. Among the groups that endorse the boycott are the Alliance of People with AIDS, Mobilization Against AIDS, Stonewall Lesbian and Gay Democratic Club, Alice B. Toklas Lesbian and Gay Democratic Club, Harvey Milk Lesbian and Gay Democratic Club and CRIR. The Golden Gate Business Association (GGBA) and the SF AIDS Foundation have taken neutral positions on the boycott, although they too view the documentary as extremely damaging.

Laurie McBride, former president of GGBA, and Chris Bowman met as representatives of the Partnership with KQED management the week before the scheduled show. This meeting, and hundreds of angry phone calls from people who had either seen a screening of the program or heard about it, prompted KQED to add an hour-long radio talk show on KQED-FM following Frontline, with guests from the SF AIDS Foundation, SF Hospice and the American Civil Liberties Union. The station also told Bowman and McBride that it would run an hour of whatever documentaries the gay community thought would balance the evening's presentation.

But this was not enough to appease the Partnership. Those who had seen the video felt that the documentary would create furor and hysteria. They insisted that nothing short of pulling the program would suffice.

The management of KQED refused to withdraw Frontline on the grounds of freedom of the press. According to station management, KQED is under no contractual obligation to show Frontline and made its decision independently. At a hastily-called press conference the afternoon before the show aired, KQED president and general manager Tony Triano said, "We have been asked not to air the Frontline program by some people, none of whom have seen the documentary. There is concern that the depiction of this one individual will create a stereotyped image of AIDS patients and gay lifestyles and lead to public backlash. We do not think this likely or sufficient to cause us to preempt a program that is running nationwide tonight. The social, ethical and health matters that it raises can no longer be ignored by the larger society."

BOYCOTT KQED: The Community Responds to "AIDS: A National Inquiry"

BY RICK OSMON

But Triano's assertion that no one calling for the program's cancellation had seen the program was untrue, and he should have known it. Panel members Larry Bush, legislative aide to Assemblyperson Art Agnos, and Bobby Reynolds, board member of the Shanti Project and a person with AIDS, as well as several journalists from the gay press had seen a video of Fabian Bridges at KQED. The screenings were arranged by KQED's public relations director, Holly Hertz.

Larry Bush responded to the documentary with outrage. "They're asking Jerry Falwell's questions for him. Where are the questions in the story about Reagan's axing $41 million from the AIDS budget, including all support for the services Fabian Bridges so desperately needed — hospice and home care services?"

"The press wonders why Reagan has not spoken about AIDS in the last five years despite its being his administration's number one health priority." Well, I want to know why the White House press hasn't bothered to ask about AIDS in the last five years.

"PBS is indifferent to the climate they are creating. This runs a week after William Buckley editorialized in the New York Times that people who tested positive on the AIDS antibody test should be tattooed. Their message is that to stop AIDS, you have to get gays to stop misbehaving. At the very least, I think this will lead to further cuts in the budget for AIDS research."

Bobby Reynolds challenged the documentary on the basis of journalistic ethics. "The news team manipulated the story. They had this man to the point that he was actually living out of the back of their trunk."

Questions first arose about the ethics of the journalists who made the documentary when Hank Plante of CBS-affiliate KRIV in Houston noticed that the Minneapolis-based WCCO news team filming the documentary was at a news conference about Fabian Bridges. "I got suspicious when I saw an out-of-town crew filming us instead of the news conference." Plante notified WCCO's rival in Minneapolis, which touched off a broad inquiry by both the broadcast and print media. Since October 1985, articles published by the St. Paul Pioneer Press Dispatch, the Minneapolis Star and Tribune, the San Jose Mercury News, and the Washington Journalism Review have discussed how the documentary breached established ethical standards of journalism.

The Mercury News reported that Houston gay activist Ray Hill, who took custody of Bridges and got him off the streets, said "WCCO created a circus and then they filmed it. I think Fabian was severely used." Hill told the Dispatch. "Fabian told me they shot a tape of him sitting in the rain, and when he got up, they asked him to please sit down again so they could finish their shot."

The Dispatch also reported that Scott Goodfellow, news director of Channel 5 in Minneapolis, wondered, "I find it very hard to believe that any news organization with the stature of WCCO could find itself in the position of paying money to what, in this case, was a self-described male prostitute who was continuing to be sexually active. They kept him on the street longer. The place for him was pretty clearly in medical care."

University of Minnesota broadcast journalism professor Irving Fang told the Dispatch that "by giving this man money, they were tying him to them and, in effect, producing checkbook journalism where you are paying somebody for a story."

Media critic Deena Aerenon observed, "They literally bait him to do tricks. It's ironic that they describe Fabian as a male prostitute because in this story the producers act as the john."

Despite these and other published criticisms, Frontline chose to show the film because the producers felt the conduct of the investigative team was justifiable. Larry Bush retorted, "It was the most sensational piece they could find." Nationally, gay political and AIDS organizations tried to reach some consensus on how to respond. In San Francisco, the Partnership lobbied furiously to get panel members to withdraw but had little success: Bush, Julian Rush (Colorado AIDS organization) and Jeff Levi (National Gay Task Force) withdrew.

Reynolds wavered on his decision to remain on the program because he thought he needed to respond to the charges in the documentary. "It's very frustrating, because we could have spent all this time and energy educating people, but instead we're trying to climb out of this hole that PBS dug for us. They force us to react."

Outside San Francisco, support for the withdrawal of panelists was not strong. Local public television stations in New York and Washington had tipped off their gay communities on March 17 and were working with them to balance the broadcast. In Los Angeles, the local affiliate agreed to produce an hour-long documentary with the AIDS Project of LA, to be shown immediately following Frontline, which they also agreed to air an hour earlier.

Paul Kawata, director of the National AIDS Network, was at the center of efforts to negotiate a fairer program with Frontline producers Mike Kirk and David Fanning. Kawata, too, was appalled by the documentary. He questioned the motives of a news team that paid the subject of their investigation. He also asked why they kept trying to get legislators, the police and the media involved in a situation that called for compassion and assistance rather than persecution. "The whole ethics of it made me furious. Ultimately, they had to turn to the gay community to get this man off the streets, to protect him from the media and to allow him to die in dignity."

Kawata was concerned about the impact of the documentary. "The timing is unfortunate in light of what's going on in Colorado, Texas and state legislatures around the country. This will not help PWAs or people who test AIDS-positive. The portrayal is so negative."

While he encouraged local gay communities to respond as they felt appropriate, Kawata also understood that Frontline did not intend to pull the documentary. "The reality was that if it was going to happen, we had to be there to defend ourselves before the nation."

He and Jeff Levi, executive director of the National Gay and Lesbian Task Force, were able to get Frontline's producers to add an interview with Diego Lopez, a PWA and executive director of the Gay Men's Health Crisis in New York; to make changes in the script to include statistics and more precise terms, such as saying that transmission is by "semen and blood" instead of "bodily fluids;" and to give a longer introduction to the documentary to discuss some of the controversial aspects of its subject matter and its filming.

Producer Mike Kirk told Coming Up!, "The response of the gay community alarmed us. We were heartbroken that a lot of people saw this documentary so negatively." He agreed that since calls began coming in for changes, the show had been improved. "We narrowed the content of the program and reduced the size of the panel."

On the question of journalistic ethics, Kirk said, "Both WCCO and WGBH (which co-produced the documentary) are award winners, and I have no problems with their ethics. I don't think the documentary crosses any serious ethical boundaries. They acted with compassion towards Fabian. There is always a 'use and be used' situation with a story."

Kirk also defended the inclusion of anti-gay Congressperson Bill Dannenmeyer (R-CA) and "Straight Slate" candidate Dr. Steven Hotze on the panel of experts. "We asked Representative Waxman (D-CA) to be on the panel, but he had a scheduling conflict." Kirk told Coming Up! that other, more sympathetic, legislators had been contacted to appear on the panel, but he could not say who they were. Asked if it might not give the public the wrong impression to have the only elected official present be Dannenmeyer, Kirk replied, "Dannenmeyer is outnumbered five-to-one on the panel by people who are sympathetic to persons with AIDS."

Kawata said the concessions won from Frontline "demonstrate the power of the community which inundated PBS with angry phone calls."

Immediately before the broadcast, Rick Pacurar, president of the Harvey Milk Democratic Club, and Paul Boneberg of Mobilization Against AIDS organized a demonstration at which over a hundred picketers marched outside the KQED studios at 8th and Bryant in San Francisco. Representatives of all groups in the Community Partnership participated. The

Fabian Bridges: The Documentary

The story of Fabian Bridges would have been tragic in its own right.

But an investigative news team from CBS-affiliate WCCO in Minneapolis seems to have deliberately exploited this destitute and dying man to create media events for their documentary. In this role they alternately fueled and followed public AIDS hysteria from the Midwest to the South.

In a prepared statement, President and General Manager of KQED Anthony S. Tiano, described the documentary: "Fabian admits to continuing to have sexual relations even in the face of an AIDS diagnosis. State and local authorities, both public health and police, are stymied in their efforts to deal with him. The Frontline film crew encourages him to seek help and even gives him small amounts of money to get him off the streets. But no one has an effect on Fabian until a member of the gay community itself steps forward and takes responsibility for him."

But that barely describes the reality and impact of this documentary. Bridges was a 29-year-old Black gay man who lived in Houston and earned a respectable salary of $19,000 until he was diagnosed with AIDS. The diagnosis proved to be only the beginning of a nightmare that characterized the last months of his life.

Bridges was rejected by his family, who, fearing contamination, refused to even let him sleep in their back yard. With no place to live and no money, Fabian drifted from shelter to shelter. If it was discovered he had AIDS, he had to move on. Finally, he was arrested stealing a bicycle.

At the jail, Fabian told officers he had AIDS. Authorities were so alarmed they dropped all charges against him within two hours, and gave him $20 for a bus ticket to get out of town. Bridges went to Cleveland, where his mother lived. Someone at WCCO read a story written by a police reporter about the incident and sent a team to Cleveland, where they found Fabian living in a seedy hotel room provided by the Red Cross.

The crew liked Fabian and felt sorry for him.

They gave him money for food, did his laundry and bought him a little radio. They got him to call his mother's house again so they could get the rejection on video.

In a lengthy interview, Fabian confessed that he had been having sex for money and affection. He admitted exchanging semen with a recent partner. "I came inside him. It was an accident; it happened as I was pulling out. It was already coming out."

The narrator intones, "Fabian's story had suddenly changed. He was no longer just a victim. After learning that Fabian was having unsafe sex, we faced a dilemma. Should we report him to the authorities or keep his story confidential?"

The news team did not consider contacting a social welfare agency or the local or state AIDS organization. Instead they reported Bridges to the health department, who said they had no power to act. WCCO was so alarmed they went to the president of the Cleveland city council.

WCCO was there to record the Cleveland city council meeting called in response to the film crew's report of Fabian. One Cleveland official intones, "This guy's got a gun and he's out shooting people." No one wondered if Fabian might need help. They sent someone out to find Fabian and get him off the streets, but he had already left Cleveland, leaving his backpack in the WCCO van. By this time, the story had gotten wide exposure in Ohio and was even covered by Time magazine.

A few weeks later, Fabian called WCCO from Houston. He was living in alleys and deserted buildings; sometimes he spent the night at the baths. WCCO gave him $15 for a hotel room on three nights, but stipulated that he not go to the baths. They also reported Fabian and his alleged unsafe activities to his physician and to Houston's director of public health.

Fabian's doctor told him to stop having sex and to find a place to live. But pressed by WCCO reporters, Fabian told them, "I guess I just don't give a damn" about transmitting AIDS and that the horrible things that were supposed to happen if you got AIDS were not happening to him.

The hysteria surrounding Fabian escalated considerably in Houston. The public health director sent a letter to Fabian, warning him that he would be subject to arrest if he exchanged bodily fluids with anyone. The Houston vice squad was charged with enforcement of the order.

By this time, the Houston media had created a city-wide hysteria, which WCCO's documentary faithfully reported. The Houston media followed Fabian, whom they now referred to as a Typhoid Mary, everywhere they could. In one live broadcast, a reporter stood in front of a coffeeshop, which "at this moment" Fabian was seated in.

Only when Houston gay activist Ray Hill stepped in to take custody of Fabian did the hysteria subside, as Fabian was finally sheltered from the media hounds. In a brief interview, the director of public health said it never occurred to him to contact anyone in the gay community for help, and never would have.

Fabian died quietly several weeks later. He was buried in a pauper's grave.

The final shot of Fabian Bridges, the documentary, takes us back to the seedy hotel in Cleveland. Fabian tells the film crew that he wanted to be respected. Lots of people die, and nobody notices, but he wanted to die a hero. He said he didn't want to die a nobody.

WCCO made sure of that.

—Analysis by Kim Corsaro and Rick Osmon

Payne, president of the Stonewall Democratic Club, claimed that since the station is supported by donations from the public, "airing this documentary amounts to misuse of public funds."

In an interview the following day, Tim Wolfred, executive director of the SF AIDS Foundation, said the Foundation would not become involved in political action as an organization but might serve as a mediator between those organizing the boycott and KQED. "The very least the community can do is push for a two-hour documentary to give balance. KQED could have been more creative and cooperative. The panel discussion and radio show did not undo the damage. No talking heads will ever have the kind of impact that documentary had."

Speaking about the feasibility of a national boycott, Wolfred mentioned that the gay communities in New York, Washington and Los Angeles had all been warned about the documentary by their local PBS stations; KQED notified no one. The other stations also made more generous concessions for follow-up programming in those cities. "Gay people in those cities may be more reluctant to endorse the boycott."

Besides seeking equal time, Wolfred suggests that there may be efforts to have Frontline and the journalists who produced the film formally censured. "The documentary had been denounced by journalists for ethical reasons as early as last October. PBS knew exactly what they were doing and refused to back off it."

Speaking on behalf of Mobilization, Boneberg said he wanted "an investigation as to how this piece got put on. Was there political pressure? It stands out so clearly for its lack of journalistic integrity. It seems to be an unusual coincidence that just last week, in a New York Times editorial, William Buckley called for tatonos for those who test AIDS-positive. And that critical legislation dealing with quarantine and testing issues is up in Colorado, California and other states. And that Reagan is trying to eliminate $41 million from the AIDS budget. I would hope that an investigation would prove my suspicions unjustified, but I want to know."

The damage has already been done and the community both locally and nationally is left with the task of asking why Frontline chose a documentary that had already been criticized for unethical journalism and trying to overcome the backlash that will inevitably result from this program.

Larry Bush sounded a note of optimism. "I think we can speak to the public directly about these issues. But first, we need to be able to start on a level playing field."

demonstrators shouted, "Take the BS out of PBS" and "Responsible journalism now!" KQED's PR director Holly Hartz said the calls by the demonstrators for a boycott came as no surprise, since they had been warned of possible trouble from stations in Los Angeles and New York.

Laurie McBride is largely responsible for fashioning an agreement within the Partnership for the boycott. At a news conference held at the Giraffe on Polk Street an hour before the program was aired, McBride said, "We are united in the face of this travesty." Speaking for Mobilization, Boneberg asked, "Remember what we did to Coors? Remember what we did to orange juice? This is going to cost KQED millions."

Another issue was raised by Alice B. Toklas Democratic Club president Roberto Esteves. "We want positive gay programming on KQED." According to sources in the community, the station has no openly lesbian or gay board members and has a history of being insensitive to the local community. Ralph

Patrick Toner & Autumn Courtney: New Leadership Emerges for '86 Parade

By Kim Corsaro

1976 was my first parade. I was fresh out of the closet and excited to be part of a gay demonstration, but nothing had prepared me for this. A few thousand of us wended our way through the Castro, around upper Market Street (the cops blocked off a couple of lanes) and into the Duboce Triangle. It was a hot, sunny day, but so many of the men were in full drag (I didn't know that many men even owned dresses, much less could I imagine marching in those heels). Three quarters of the women had their tops off (It was a mark of women's oppression that we couldn't bare our breasts like men could, and on this day we would flaunt our rebellion against that.). The crowd chants alternated between "Out of the Bars and Into the Streets" and "Gay Rights Now!"

As the parade worked its way down Noe Street to Duboce Park, where we would all board streetcars to take us to the celebration at Marx Meadows in Golden Gate Park, I overheard two silver-haired matrons discussing the parade as it passed them by. "You know, Mabel," said one to the other, "These boys just don't dress up like they used to."

The next year, Anita Bryant changed all of that. In 1977 the orange juice queen went on the rampage against gay rights in her hometown of Miami. The gay rights ordinance fell there, and like dominoes, ordinances began toppling across the country.

San Francisco's gay community took it personally. Few of us were natives; we came from those cities in Middle America that were denying us our basic human rights. So in 1977 on Gay Freedom Day, three hundred thousand of us took to the streets. It was the largest, loudest and most exciting demonstration of gay pride that had ever taken place.

With the escalated outpouring of energy, the organization of Gay Freedom Day took on a whole new character. Bringing so many people together to pull off such a huge event required massive organization. The Parade "committee" grew enormously, in personnel and in structure.

In 1980, a small faction of the community took advantage of the new bureaucracy to try to take over the Parade organization to suit their politics. Their shopping list included plans to charge admission to the celebration at Civic Center and make general membership in the committee contingent on paying dues. But the biggest explosion occurred when they moved to eliminate speakers from the celebration. The ensuing battle split the community wide open. After hundreds of hours of heated meetings, the controlling faction lost and the new Parade structure emerged, the same one the Parade presently operates under. General membership was free; anyone could be a voting member after attending two meetings. Two co-chairs ran the organization, but all decisions had to be approved by the general membership. The new committee renamed the event the Lesbian/Gay Freedom Day Parade.

But the changes hadn't come peacefully, and some hard feelings remained. Rumors abounded: "radical dykes" had taken over the parade; the bar crowd wasn't welcome. And though its structure had evolved, from 1981 to 1985 much of the committee leadership was drawn from the political left of the gay community, the same group that had won the battle in 1980. Communication with other segments of the community wasn't always the greatest. The bar community, in particular, felt shut out.

This year, a dramatic shift has once again occurred in the personages of the two co-chairs for the 1986 Parade. Patrick Toner, 23, seemingly came out of nowhere and won election as male co-chair. Toner first came to prominence in San Francisco last May when he won the Mr. International Leather crown. He's actively contributed his time and energy to a variety of community fundraisers and special events, particularly in the South of Market community. In order to be elected Parade co-chair, he needed 50% of the vote, plus one. He got just that.

The female co-chair this year is Autumn Courtney. She has been active in the lesbian/gay political community for several years and works as a bouncer at Amelia's. But her election raised a storm of controversy, because she is the first out bisexual to head the Parade. She turns 29 this month.

In March, Toner and Courtney took a couple of hours out of their 14-hour-a-day schedules to talk to Coming Up! about some of their hopes for this year's Parade and celebration.

[Coming Up!:] You both represent a truly radical shift in Parade leadership. The 1980 restructuring of the Parade committee was important in terms of opening up the Parade planning to the entire community, but it seems that what's happened over the years is that a small group still controls the Parade.

[Courtney:] Yeah, that's what we've found. When I joined right after '83's Parade, I found that a lot of people were operating independent of the community. That was frustrating, because I'm a real community-oriented person. It was just my hope to become part of the leadership and open it up.

[Toner:] Before I got involved, I used to view the Parade committee as being this other entity that I knew nothing about that put on this event. I had no conception of what it was. And I've found a lot of people are like that. One thing that Autumn and I are very much going to do is to say it's not "a little them" putting this thing together, it's all of us. And hopefully, we'll get to relay that message, because we want a lot more people involved.

We hear a lot of bitching about what some people think we should do, and our response is "Hey, you want to make a change, you can do it. You come to meetings, and we welcome any input from anybody." I'm not putting this Parade on for myself, or the Parade committee itself. It's for everybody.

Autumn, I know that there are women who aren't supporting you because you are bisexual. They've said, "How can you possibly speak for the lesbian community as a bisexual?"

[Courtney:] I realized as a teenager that I was different. From the time I was 18 until about 22 I was in a relationship with a man, but I was suppressing feelings I had for women. I was 23 when I had my first female lover. I feel like I've gone through everything that a lesbian would go through. I've felt the rejection from my family; I felt the rejection and discrimination at work; I couldn't talk about my lover. I felt the pressures from society all the way around, and I started fighting back against it. After a couple years of trying to be the perfect lesbian, I found I still had feelings for men, and I had a hard time reconciling that until I started getting into counseling and being involved with the San Francisco Bisexual Center where I found that loving both men and women is a natural process for a lot of people.

By no means do I identify as straight. There's nothing straight about my life. I live, I work in the gay and lesbian community. Since I've been in San Francisco, I shop in gay stores, I bank at a gay bank, I don't even know any straight people. And I identify with women and the oppression that they've felt, as lesbians and as women. On the Kinsey scale, I'm like a 4 1/2, if that's important to some people.

It hurts me when women don't validate my experience, and it really hurts me when they don't validate my ability to be a leader, because I'm always there saying, "Don't call women girls." "That's sexist, you can't do that." "We need more women in here," I'm always there.

[Toner:] We're so much into labeling. Here we are as an oppressed people, and we're bigoted at the same time. I remember someone told Autumn, "Well, honey, you're just not the same queer as they are, but you're still queer."

[Courtney:] I'm queer, I'm just a different shade. It's true. It hurts and I just get over it and get on with it. But it's interesting that we're so fixed on these labels, these identities.

[Toner:] Stereotypes. We're people.

How has it been for you, Patrick, particularly with your role as Mr. International Leather?

[Toner:] One of the sub-cultures of our culture I'm very active in is the leather community. Leather is just sexuality, and a lot of people don't really understand that. It's pure and simple sexuality. And from that it encompasses a lot more within the community. We're very much like a family, we take care of one other. It's like a real brotherhood exists.

I don't see why our whole community can't be like that. That's something I very much believe in, men and women working together. The Parade has a lot of support throughout the men's and women's community, and we continuously do outreach. We try to be seen and known to the Asian community, the women's community, people of color, people with special needs, whether they be mobility impaired or people with AIDS, ARC. I think we're getting a lot of response and support from the community I didn't expect to get.

When you say "the community," did you feel like the bar community in particular, the leather community, was not going to be

[Courtney:] Right, the bar community very specifically. So much of our history comes from the bars — and this is for both men and women — if you go back pre-Stonewall, where did we meet, how did we meet each other? It was through the bars. And to leave them out of the parade and celebration is ridiculous and it's a real tragedy.

Have you encountered any resistance in the men's community, Patrick?

[Toner:] Yeah, a hell of a lot. A lot of the men's community don't like the word "lesbian." And this sounds awful, but I could personally care less what we call this thing. Because I'm very much in support of going out and having a parade, and being seen and being known.

A lot of the old time people are just really hung up on the word "lesbian." It's just real extreme sexism in the men's community. That is all I see it as. I consider myself a new generation coming in, and a lot of us are like, "Hey, it doesn't really matter." And a lot of the old time people are still hanging on. The Parade covers things like childcare the day of the Parade, and they're against that; they're against the word "lesbian;" they're against helping people with special needs.

How do you address that with them?

[Courtney:] He tells them to get over it.

[Toner:] Yeah. They think only women are single parents and that's not true. I've been amazed to see how many men are bringing their children up.

[Toner:] Yes, it's a huge contingent. Believe it or not, even though we are lesbian and gay, we are still capable of having offspring. But a lot of the people who are putting up resistance are slowly coming around and saying, "Hey, we'll give you a little inch, we'll see what you do with that." I guess if we prove ourselves to them, they'll give us a little more. It's the only way to go about it. You can't be coming in like bulldozers. You can't do that all the time.

The other thing is that Middle America has no idea that we even have organizations, that we have a softball league, or that we actually bowl, or that we have a band, or that there's an organization that puts together parades. It's just like they think that all we want to do is go out and fuck our brains out. And they get that idea from the masculine view of gay people. That was one of the concerns I'd never considered, when the motion was made a couple of months ago to drop the word "lesbian" from the Parade title. A lot of women were like, here we are, we're fighting for our rights, and Middle America equates gay with white, gay male. They never even think that we're anything else.

Let's talk a little bit about the tone of the parade, because it has changed so much over the years. It started out as a sort of rag-tag radical gay rights demonstration, and then it got big, both as a major political demonstration, and also seemed like a giant community party, with a lot more floats. It seems like in recent years the party atmosphere, the celebration atmosphere has waned somewhat.

[Toner:] That has a lot to do with where our heads have been for the past three or four years in San Francisco. Our community as a whole went into sort of a remission in response to the AIDS crisis, and we sort of backed off from doing anything. And slowly now we're saying, "Hey, we can still live with this, but it doesn't mean that we can't celebrate." Hopefully, through this year's parade and celebration we're going to hit a balance between a great party and a strong statement about the lesbian/gay rights movement. I know, when I first got involved in the parade, I thought, "Oh, yeah, it needs to be a party!" And then I stopped to remember why we march down Market Street to begin with, and it was Stonewall. Even now, you can look at the political and social currents and see that we still have a hell of a long way to go. One thing that's unique about San Francisco is that we can have the seriousness of our movement along with a party at the same time.

Last year the Parade took in $150,000, $16,000 short of a pared-down budget. This year, you've increased the budget to $225,000. How do you feel about that money going to something like the Parade as opposed to AIDS funding? Does that come up for you?

[Both, emphatically:] Yes!

[Courtney:] The thing is, a lot is being done for AIDS, because it's not just a gay or lesbian disease, it affects the entire worldwide community, everybody. The Parade and celebration's a little different, because we're commemorating the Stonewall riots in June 1969. It's very important for people to get out and show our strength, our numbers, our unity, our diversity. We call it our Independence Day. Our Fourth of July. People need a chance to come together and celebrate, along with remembering the seriousness of our movement. We can't let AIDS detract from that. It's a disease, it's life-threatening, and it's just an awful crisis, but we still need to come together to celebrate...

[Toner:] To show our best. That's what we're doing. We're taking to Market Street the last Sunday of June to Parade our very best.

We're so bogged down, 364 days out of the year, we're constantly reminded that we have this plague right on our backs. And hell, one day out of the year we need a day off. Let it all hang out and go for it. That's more or less my attitude.

[Courtney:] We offer a forum for a whole range of groups to come together and connect with three to four hundred thousand people. They can collect money for AIDS; there's also going to be groups collecting money for the Lesbian Rights Project and the SPCA. A lot of money is generated the day of the Parade. Also, the committee works with businesses that work with the gay community, like Schmidt & Schmidt insurance. It's always been Parade policy to put our money back in the community. Ninety percent goes back in, and we're really proud of that.

[Toner:] We're also doing a lot of joint fundraisers. We're working with the Band Foundation and the Gay Games. We're doing a fundraiser at the Pendulum to benefit the Sickle Cell Anemia Fund and the gay community. It's not like we're just supporting one group. We're one of the few organizations that is actually reflective of the entire community. We deal with everything. [Pauses, reflectively, then laughs] It's just a hell of a job!

[Courtney:] I always think of us when they have those Peace Corp commercials, "The hardest job you'll ever love."

'86 AIDS Bike-A-Thon Seeks 500 Riders and $250,000

Different Spokes bicycle club is organizing what may be the largest community fundraising event of the decade to raise money for the greatest health threat to the century — AIDS. On Saturday, May 3, the '86 AIDS Bike-A-Thon will take off with eight different AIDS service agencies slated as beneficiaries. The goal of the bike-a-thon is to enlist 500 cyclists to raise $250,000 in pledges for the AIDS programs. In 1985, 60 men and women rode 100 miles from San Francisco to the Russian River, and AIDS services profited by $30,000.

One hundred percent of all pledge monies raised by riders will go directly to the eight beneficiary organizations for direct patient care services. Riders and pledgers will decide which agency(s) will receive the money they personally raise, similar to the United Way Donor Option Plan. Usually bike-a-thons are organized by the larger charities for the benefit of themselves. But the fact that all money raised will go directly to the AIDS groups makes this bike-a-thon unique. At no time in the history of San Francisco has a sporting/recreational organization attempted such a challenge.

Women on Wheels, a women's bicycle club, is joining forces with Bay Area Career Women (BACW), the 1,000-member lesbian organization, to raise thousands of dollars for the eight beneficiaries. Members of the bicycle club will ride and members of the professional women's group will be asked to pledge money to the women riders. "This is a great opportunity for the women's community to [Toner:] But, you know, I'm enjoying it. When I first got involved, I thought, "I've never been involved with the parade committee. How am I just going to come in here and take over?" You know? Again, I didn't see the committee supporting me, and I didn't see the community supporting me then, either. But I was surprised. Plus there's a lot of different areas in the community I was never aware existed before I got involved in the parade. And I'm becoming — a lot of my friends are calling me a militant lesbian now [laughs], because I'm [raises his fist] "Let's march!" It's a lot of fun.

We're making a lot of changes in the Parade this year that we're really excited about. One is to add more floats. We're doing a float fund to match dollars if someone can't afford a float. We're trying to get different communities like the Castro, Tenderloin, or women's bars as a whole to do a float. There's a lot of areas that haven't been represented in the Parade. The show their support and compassion for those suffering with AIDS," announced Donna Yutzy of BACW. "We are looking for an outpouring of support which will be translated into dollars for AIDS programs at our April 7 meeting with guest Ginnie Foat, former California NOW president."

"We want to do all we can, the cyclists from Women on Wheels will be present on April 7, pledge forms in hand," stated Sharon Landee, coordinator of the women's bicycle club which has 90 members. "We rode in last year's bike-a-thon and we're ready to ride again."

Two routes are available. A 25-mile, magically flat San Francisco loop and a 100-mile San Francisco/Marin loop are offered so that everyone can participate. Support vehicles will be provided for both routes, as well as plenty of protein, food and liquid refreshments. Prizes, including bicycles, will be awarded to the high pledgers. Different Spokes will offer preview rides of the two routes every weekend starting Sunday, March 30. (Check Coming Up! calendar for complete details).

Beneficiaries of the pledge ride are AIDS House, SF AIDS Foundation, SF AIDS Fund, The Godfather Fund, Pacific Center AIDS Project, People With AIDS, Shanti and the Sonoma County AIDS Network. All eight agencies have agreed to funnel every dollar raised by the '86 AIDS Bike-A-Thon into patient services including health, housing, social services, counseling and other programs which provide direct support to people with AIDS.

Registration packs are available at the Coming Up! office (867 Valencia Street), Headlines (Castro and Polk) and All American Boy (Castro) or from any of the beneficiaries. Also, registration packs may be obtained by writing: '86 AIDS Bike-A-Thon, Different Spokes, POE 14711, SF 94114 or by calling (415) 771-0677.

Hispanic or Asian communities. See, these are groups that we want to reach out to.

I don't see it as taking away money or support from any organization. I think it adds that. I know it's an inspiration for me to stand back and see contingent after contingent going by. And we're going to add even more contingents.

And secondly, our stage last year got rave reviews from the straight and gay press, and

NOTICE

TO ALL PERSONS WHO BELIEVE THAT PACIFIC TELEPHONE AND TELEGRAPH COMPANY OR PACIFIC BELL HAVE DISCRIMINATED AGAINST THEM IN EMPLOYMENT, BASED UPON THEIR SEXUAL ORIENTATION:

A class action has been filed in the Superior Court of California, in and for the County of San Francisco, on behalf of all persons who have been discriminated against in employment, based upon their homosexuality, by Pacific Telephone and Telegraph Co., or by Pacific Bell (collectively referred to as "the Company"), during the period 1970 to the present. If you are a homosexual man or woman, and you either (a) applied for employment with the Company during the above period and were rejected due to your homosexuality, (b) were employed by the Company at any time during that period and were terminated, denied promotion, or otherwise harassed or discriminated against due to your homosexuality, or (c) intend to apply in the future for employment by the Company, and fear that you will suffer discrimination due to your homosexuality, you may be included in this class action.

The action is entitled Gay Law Students Association, National Gay Task Force, Bernard Boyle, Robert DeSantis, Jose Garcia, Marvin McMahan, Julia Nava, and Victor Seth Sargeant, individually, and on behalf of all others similarly situated, versus the Pacific Telephone and Telegraph Company, No. 691-750. Plaintiffs contend that during the period 1970 through the present, inclusive, the company had a policy and practice of discrimination against homosexual applicants for employment and employees. The named plaintiffs and class representatives include two associations organized in part for the purpose of eliminating discrimination against homosexuals in employment, rejected applicants for employment by the Company, and former and current employees of the Company. The Company denies that it has engaged in arbitrary employment discrimination against homosexuals.

Any member of the class may exclude him or herself from the class and from this action by giving timely notice of his or her desire to do so. The deadline for giving such notice has been extended to April 1, 1986. If you desire to be excluded from the class, you must notify the Court of that fact by April 1, 1986, by a letter mentioning the above case name and number and stating that you wish to exclude yourself from the class in this action, addressed to: Clerk, San Francisco Superior Court, City Hall, San Francisco, California 94102. The claim of any class member who does not request to be excluded from the class by the above procedure will be terminated by the judgment in this action under the rule of res judicata.

Any class member who does not request exclusion may move in the San Francisco Superior Court for permission to appear in this action as a named class co-representative.

Plaintiffs estimate that, if successful, the total amount of the recovery in this action will be at least five million dollars. Plaintiff's counsel anticipate that they will recover fees and costs of approximately $500,000, which will be paid from the funds recovered before distribution of the net proceeds to class members. The net amount to be recovered by each member if the action is successful will be determined by an apportionment of the remainder of the recovery and will depend in part upon the evidence of actual damages such as lost wages which is proven by each class member who presents a claim for resolution by the Court. In addition, plaintiffs will seek an order permitting distribution of any uncollected portion of the total recovery to organizations which serve the California homosexual community.

Class members who do not wish to request exclusion from this action, and wish to obtain further information may contact Michael Dickstein or Kevin James at Heller, Ehrman, White & McAuliffe, 44 Montgomery Street, San Francisco 94104, (415) 772-6000, or Leonard Graff at National Gay Rights Advocates, 540 Castro Street, San Francisco 94114, (415) 863-9156.

Ironically, the Lesbian Chorus indirectly owes its existence to two notorious anti-gay forces: Anita Bryant and the Briggs initiative. In the late seventies, gays and lesbians in San Francisco rallied to fight these gorgons. This surge of energy sparked the gay cultural movement, a push to put gay creative talent to use in our own community. The Gay Freedom Day Marching Band formed in 1978 and soon had a brother, the Gay Men's Chorus. These organizations lived on after the parade. The Lesbian Chorus was conceived as a small sister. But the new relative was soon unhappy in the family.

Sonni Zambino was there in the beginning. Seven women sang in the chorus' maiden performance at a concert featuring the Gay Freedom Day Marching Band. "[By then], politically, things were already an inferno between the lesbian chorus and the gay men's chorus and also Jon Sims (director of the marching band)." Programs were printed with no mention of the women's chorus. This was righted. For the spring joint concert of the men's and women's choruses, according to Zambino, "it was made clear that the women had no say in ticket prices, etc. We were then 17." Although the concert went well, incidents like these fostered the women's determination to break away. The SFLC became an independent group in the spring of 1979. In a statement about the divorce, one member wrote, "Our past association with the men's chorus has continually been a struggle for recognition and respect."

After the concert with the Gay Men's Chorus, the SFLC put out a call for new members. Eighty women responded — enthusiasm hit a high "C." Usually the chorus maintains an average of 20-30 members. The excitement generated by the gay cultural movement carried the group along for several years, culminating in a joint concert with the Los Angeles Women's Community Chorus in the summer of 1981. This event was both a heyday and a breaking point for the organization. The concert was a success, but the logistics of hosting the Los Angeles group, meeting their hefty list of politically correct demands, and producing the show took its toll. According to one long-time member, "The net result was that people got hurt, communication sucked, and all kinds of things happened that were counterproductive to our cohesiveness and community. People left in droves after that."

The strain of working in a collective structure must take some of the blame for this disenchantment. In fact, the continued existence of the SFLC is remarkable in light of its commitment to the collective process. The structure has been both a boon and a bane. It gives members the reassurance of an equal voice in

Lesbian Chorus Celebrates 8 Years

The room looked like a high school gymnasium decorated for a dance. Streamers and balloons signalled festivity from the door, and above a big banner read "But of chorus..." High ceiling lights bounced off the bare wooden floor. There the resemblance to a high school dance ended. The San Francisco Lesbian Chorus (SFLC) was holding an eight-year reunion at the Women's Building.

Sheet music rested on the chairs as current members of the chorus mingled with veterans of other, stormier years. About 75 women attended. Sonni Zambino, the chorus' first conductor, took the microphone to reminisce about the birth of the organization. Then the singing started. The present conductor, decisions, but can be cumbersome and frustrating. Judy Stone joined the chorus a few months after it started. "It's probably the closest thing to anarchy that I've ever seen. For the most part, the group is a lot more civil than it used to be to its members and other people...a lot gets hashed out in committee. There's a lot more trust, and with trust comes a willingness to give over power to people to make decisions...partly, people just didn't have the skills. If you've never seen a collective in action, and don't know how to function in it, the burn-out level is extremely high, because you don't understand why you have to spend hours talking about someone's underwear when you want to talk about her socks..."

Leslie Hassberg, led the chorus through a selection of recent pieces and old favorites. "My Girl" received an understandably enthusiastic treatment, and "Dykes are Coming Out All Over" rang with pride and fervor. Ex-chorus members were invited to join the present members in a singalong.

The music that followed sometimes rambled off-course, but the sentiment powering it was obvious. Smiles abounded. As a finale, the singers formed a circle, standing with their arms around each other. They sang "Bright Morning Stars," a beautiful old Appalachian folk tune. Swaying gently, the women filled the room with their voices, good and true. Eight years? Something to sing about indeed...

Or maybe when you want to sing? Zambino mentioned a rehearsal of "Amazing Grace" that broke down when a blind chorus member objected to the line "I once was blind, but now I see." "The woman got up and said, 'I don't like that line. I will never see.' And it just started a whole controversy — I think the rest of rehearsal was taken up with whether we should sing this line, why it is offensive, blah, blah, blah. Too many rehearsals were like that, and there was nothing to do to stop it. A lot of women dropped out because of this kind of thing...but that's one part of the group that makes it what it is."

What it is...while not a political organization, from its inception the chorus has encouraged feminist analysis, both inside and outside its ranks. This climate of sensitivity forced Zambino to re-examine some of her own ways of thinking and talking. "I was, so to speak, slammed up against the wall more than once for things that would come out of my mouth. Not that I was trying to put someone down or hurt anyone, I just didn't know better. And I got a very quick education."

An example of some external consciousness-raising and the most widely publicized incident in the group's history occurred when the members chose not to sing. The SFLC was scheduled to perform (along with other acts) at a fundraiser for Harry Britt, held at the Castro Theatre in April of 1981. Charles Pierce appeared first. His humor gradually offended the women to the boiling point ("Why are there cocks on weathervanes? Because wouldn't a cunt look funny flapping in the breeze, and when the wind blew through it, it might give erroneous weather reports.") and they walked out. The ensuing brouhaha showed that the chorus' action had hit a nerve in the gay community. Issues raised were the sexism and racism present in some gay male humor, and that old bugaboo of the women's movement, the humorlessness of feminists. Vituperative letters were published in the Bay Area Reporter (one tagging the women as the "hard-core radical lesbian element under the guise of a choral group"), Gay Community News in Boston covered the story, and Harry Britt issued an apology to his gay and lesbian constituency for any offence committed in his name. He was not at the fundraiser, being otherwise occupied talking to Jane Fonda about feminism. Sonni Zambino was quoted as saying, "The experience cut our hearts out as women, not just as lesbians."

A major item on the bias-awareness agenda these days is an effort to attract more Black and Third World women. A longstanding concern of the group has been that it presents a mostly lily-white face to the world. Women of color have joined but have not stayed. Plans include "unlearning racism" workshops for chorus members, concerted community outreach, and making the repertoire more responsive to the needs of Third World women.

One group that the chorus does attract is newcomers to town. It is a way to ease into the community and meet other women without going to a bar. Some beautiful duets have been started. The chorus gains and sheds members each year, as Judy Stone puts it, "organically, like the cells of the body." This makes continuity difficult, but provides fresh blood. A healthy transfusion was injected with the arrival two years ago of a new conductor, Leslie Hassberg.

Hassberg is something of a musical

WHAT'S GOING DOWN

By LOUISE RAFKIN

Surely Not the Baby Jesus: In the ongoing struggle against the discrimination of "non-traditional" families who wish to foster children in Massachusetts, an activist group took the "Baby Jesus" from its manger last December and left a message for the Governor in its place: "This barn does not meet Governor Dukakis' criteria for foster care placement. We have taken the infant until a traditional heterosexual married couple with prior child-raising experience steps forward to claim him." The Department of Social Service now ranks prospective foster parents in the following order: biological parents, relatives, married couples, unmarried people with parenting experience, unmarried people, group care. The DSS must first try to place the child in a "traditional family setting," i.e. hets, before even considering the other options.

Jesus Who? And in New York a baby conceived through artificial insemination cannot assume the surname of its mother's lesbian lover. The state's Supreme Court denied the mother's appeal on the grounds that it was not in the best interest of the child. The court made a further comment, saying that the child would be subjected to additional trauma should the couple separate. Gee, I wonder why the court doesn't rule the use of men's last names illegal? The logic in high places astounds me...

Hooray for the Computer Age: An angry Atlanta man programmed his computer to dial Jerry Falwell's "Old Time Gospel Hour" 800 number every 30 seconds after hearing an offensive sermon on gays and AIDS. Eight months and 500,000 calls later, Southern Bell threatened to cut the man's phone service off. They cost the old preacher a buck apiece, they did...

Not a Dime for a Dance (and not in S.F.): A couple of Sioux Falls women were recently awarded $1,500 by a federal grand jury after being arrested for dancing together at a local nightclub. The owner said he didn't "want that kind of people" in his nightclub. Turns out they weren't, either, though they said that "wasn't the point." The women charged him with public humiliation, embarrassment, and mental and emotional stress. I don't know, d'ya think a couple of us would have been so favored by the court? I've got my doubts.

Of Course, They're the Mounted Police: In adopting a new Charter of Rights, the Canadian government has said it will now allow gays in the famous Royal Canadian Mounted police. Conservative Party member Alex Kindy's comment: "We are condoning a third sex, somebody who is not exactly normal. We are sending out a dangerous message." A third sex? Is that a bit like a third eye? Or maybe the third rail?

Yuk, Yuk, Yuk, Yuk: I'm referring, of course, to that piece of revolting trash, the weekly New American, the right arm of the John Birch Society joined with the best of Republicans. Phyllis Schlafly's got a column within, and it runs editorial gems like "Why Sack the Friendly Marcos?" Their March 17 issue was devoted to the politics of AIDS, though it seemed but an excuse to spew their homophobia. In the preface to an interview with Dr. Cameron of the Institute for the Scientific Investigation of Sexuality (huh?) the magazine warns its readers that "the information in this article... touches on the thoroughly repulsive practices of homosexuals... we are sorry to have to publish many of the sordid yet pertinent details provided by Dr. Cameron." The dear doctor then goes on to say that "homosexual males are probably the filthiest, dirtiest people on the face of the earth. I say that after great study." In another article, a different doctor says, "Thousands of children are stolen from parents each year to meet the sexual needs of homosexuals" — and — "Every homosexual is the product of premature seduction in childhood." There's more, but I don't recommend the weak of stomach to pursue it. In total, it's a great example of the cauldron of anti-gay sickness stirred up in the name of AIDS "awareness." If you see a copy of this rag at your local newsstand, I suggest you accidentally drop your half eaten ice cream cone upon it...that, or throw it out.

What Kind of Sex? It's a little tiny paragraph, nearly lost amidst the rubble in JoAnn Loulan's Lesbian Sex handbook recently published by Spinster's Ink. But it's the kind of thing I don't really want my mother to read, if you know what I mean. In total: "Some lesbians have sex with men occasionally or anonymously for variety. Others have fairly regular sexual encounters with a particular man. For some lesbians, sex with men is a wonderful adjunct to their ongoing sexual relating to women." Well, there you have it. Whaddya think? I think we used to call them "bi" — no? Responses welcome, and I thank D & J for reading so thoroughly...

Endnote: Whatever happened to Fresca?

Lesbian Chorus...

renaissance woman. She has done conducting coursework at San Francisco State University, currently studies voice there, plays the piano, performed with a vocal group called the Choral Majority for two-and-a-half years, and does arranging. Among other things. She is professional about music, and sees a tug-of-war going on in the chorus. "The central conflict in the group is about what exactly we are supposed to be to our community. Are we supposed to be a good performing group or are we supposed to be open to everyone? There are a lot of people in the chorus who would like to do both, but we really haven't figured out a way to do that. For a performing group, I don't think you can have no musical standards at all.... In the early years when the idea of a lesbian chorus was new, people would come simply because it was a lesbian chorus. I did the same thing, went to all their performances and stopped going after a while because it was not musically gratifying."

The chorus' original policy was to admit anyone willing to make a certain commitment of time. No requirements of vocal skill, previous experience or the ability to read music. You didn't even absolutely have to be a lesbian. A recent compromise is the standard that prospective members should be able to match pitches, i.e., reproduce a note from a piano or another voice. It seems a reasonable request of people who want to join a singing group.

Another shift in direction of late has been the inclusion of more humor in the performances. The group does parodies of show tunes, sometimes in drag or costume. This season one big number will be "Dykes are Coming Out All Over" based on Carousel's song about June. Judy Stone calls this "More conscious humor — we've always been very silly, but it hasn't come out. So we're having a better time, and our audiences are having a better time. That kind of thing makes us more accessible."

Not only are these "humorless" feminists going for more laughs — they are also working toward coalitions with other local choral groups. Part of the chorus will perform with the Temescal Gay Men's Chorus, May 31-June 7, location to be announced. Some of the same problems that cause the group to split from the Gay Men's Chorus have come up, but a spirit of conciliation informs the give-and-take. The women are more committed to making concerts accessible to the handicapped and people with children. This is not high on the priority list for the men.

Concert dress proved to be a small bone of contention, too. For some Brahms waltzes in the program, the Temescal Chorus director wanted the women to wear gowns. (What's next, dykes on spikes?) The men would wear tuxedos. Hassberg offered a compromise: "I said I think we can swing it if our members get a choice of wearing a tux or a gown. The Temescal director thought it was very funny, and said there were a couple of guys in his organization who wouldn't mind wearing gowns. But he didn't want the performers to have a choice...so we said we weren't willing to wear gowns, but we would standardize what we wore to be similar to what they wore. We decided on black pants, a white or purple shirt and black tie...the waltzes are 19th century cocktail lounge music, very romantic, and I understand where he got that idea from [the gowns], but they weren't thinking 'lesbian chorus,' they were thinking 'women's voices.' There is a difference...there's a movement now in the gay arts community to form coalitions. Sometimes when they [men] say to themselves, yes, we want the women to be involved in this, they don't realize that again it's not just women's bodies, there are opinions attached to these women."

The chorus' repertoire ranges from medieval to modern, from classical to jazz. Women's music is always on the program. Sistersinger's Network, which serves many women's choral groups, is a source of arrangements. One might think there are reams of music out there to be sung, but for a group with the special standards of the SFLC, those reams sift out to a relatively small selection. Hassberg explains: "There's very little out there in regular published music that we can just take and use. Most other choruses don't go through the same process we do. First of all, we eliminate all the sacred music. We decided on that several years ago. This eliminates at least half the music [available]. If you take out all the music that is offensive to people (love songs from men to women, women to men, or anything about how wonderful drinking is) and you take out all the things that are not arranged for women's voices, you're down to maybe a tenth of what is out there. Then you discard all the stuff that is too juvenile (because most things that are written for treble voice are written for children) and pieces that are too difficult...." It's a wonder they're not reduced to singing scales on stage.

The SFLC will perform in Sacramento on April 19, and plans a Bay Area appearance for June 21 (watch for announcements). The members are also trying to raise money to attend a national Gay and Lesbian Choral Caucus in Minneapolis, feeling that it is important for women to be represented among the flood of men's choral groups. So the Lesbian Chorus forges ahead under the steam of its convictions and a love of music. Judy Stone describes the significance of the chorus to her: "It's a very important organization in a small way. It's not going to change the world, but it's going to provide women with a chance to sing for themselves and others...it's a way of saying, 'Everyone can make music.'"

THE STATE OF THE SCIENCE

By MICHAEL HELQUIST

Progress in Basic Research

In recent months, AIDS researchers have announced advances in their understanding of how the virus affects the immune system and of how animals infected with the AIDS virus may provide clues about vaccine development. Both reports represent small steps on the path to more dramatic developments of treatments and vaccines in the future.

In January, researchers at the Centers for Disease Control reported that an AIDS infection apparently begins when a virus protein called gp110 recognizes and adheres to the T-4 protein on T-4 cells (Science, January 17, 1986). The T-4 cells are white blood cells that play a critical role in directing other cells to mount effective immune responses to foreign agents. The discovery explains how the AIDS virus is able to confront the many white blood cells and infect only the T-4 cells: the specific viral protein seeks to bind with a specific cell protein.

The CDC researchers said that this new study suggested that AIDS infections could be stopped or prevented by using drugs to attack that part of the virus, the gp110 protein, that directs it toward the T-4 cells. Another approach would be to treat the T-4 cells to reject the viral protein.

Late in February, researchers from the National Cancer Institute (NCI) announced that antibodies from animals infected with the AIDS virus protected some cells from the destruction that normally results from the virus. The scientists used segments of the protein coating that envelops the AIDS virus to stimulate immune responses. Animals such as mice, rabbits, pigs and rhesus monkeys do produce antibodies when they have been injected with the viral proteins. The researchers do not know if the immune response, the antibody production, is strong enough to neutralize the virus.

The NCI scientists plan to vaccinate chimpanzees with proteins of the AIDS virus to stimulate antibody production; then the animals will be injected with the virus to see if the vaccine offers any protection. At the time of the announcement, the NCI researcher said the chimpanzee laboratory tests would begin in a few weeks. If the tests are successful, a possible human vaccine would be that much closer. But the federal researchers caution that an effective human vaccine is still considered to be years away.

Questions of Transmission

Questions about the transmission of the AIDS virus via different bodily fluids have taken hold of scientific inquiry. After a lengthy delay, scientists have finally taken a look not only at blood products and semen but also at saliva, tears, breast milk, urine, peripheral blood, vaginal secretions and cerebral spinal fluid. The AIDS virus or antibodies to the virus have been found in each of these. What else remains? The role of pre-seminal fluid continues to be of great importance to sexually active individuals. It is likely that the virus will be isolated in this fluid as well.

Although modern technology makes much viral isolation possible, does the presence of the virus indicate that a fluid is actually infectious? Not necessarily, according to epidemiological research and the opinion of several scientists.

First, consider the questions about AIDS transmission via saliva. In October 1984, AIDS researchers announced the isolation of the AIDS virus in the saliva of eight of 18 individuals who either had ARC or who had sexual contact with people who had AIDS (Science, October 26, 1984). However, they did not find the virus in any of the saliva samples from 20 individuals with AIDS. This report prompted persistent fears about the casual spread of AIDS.

More than a year later, in December 1985, researchers at Massachusetts General Hospital issued a report that they said should allay fears of casual contagion (New England Journal of Medicine, December 19, 1985). They were able to detect the AIDS virus in the saliva of only one in 71 gay men known to be infected with the disease. In the one exception, the amount of the virus was "ten thousandfold lower" than in the same man's blood.

Researchers for both the 1984 and the 1985 reports asserted that although their study results differed, the epidemiological evidence still indicated that saliva has not been an avenue of disease transmission.

Even before anyone could be reassured that virus-carrying saliva was not present in the larger sample of individuals, Harvard researchers turned the question around one more time (Blood, March 1986). They found AIDS virus antibodies in the saliva of each of 28 individuals whose blood tests also revealed viral infection although they had not developed full-blown AIDS. The investigators of this study asserted that the presence of the antibodies probably means that the virus is present also.

Harvard researcher Dr. David Archibald suggested that his study helped clarify the confusion of the different saliva studies. He speculated that the viruses are difficult to detect in saliva because they are bound to antibodies. He also suggested that this possibility may explain why saliva has played no apparent role in the transmission of AIDS. In addition, the studies continue to indicate very low levels of the virus in the saliva samples. What has stayed constant throughout this period of varying study results is the epidemiological evidence.

What is the Risk of Oral Sex?

There has not been such confusion about the presence of the AIDS virus in semen; it was one of the first bodily fluids implicated in AIDS transmission. A report from Vancouver, British Columbia, researchers finally brought into the open the speculation about the possible safety of oral sex. Although semen transferred from one partner to another via anal intercourse continues to be a major risk factor, the Canadians found that oral sex appears to play an insignificant role in the transmission of the AIDS virus.

First published in the Canadian Medical Association Journal and then in The Lancet (February 15, 1986), the report by the Vancouver researchers outlined their study of 21 men who met the following criteria at the onset of the study: those who had not engaged in receptive anal intercourse or receptive fisting for the previous year and who tested negative to the AIDS antibody. The men had engaged in oral sex: sucking, being sucked, swallowing semen and rimming. Fifteen men reported having had more than five partners in the previous year; eight reported more than 20 partners during the same period. Several of the men had made sexual contacts in bathhouses.

Follow-up antibody tests were administered to the subjects at the end of the study. Only one of the 21 men seroconverted: that is, tested positive for the AIDS antibody after originally being negative. That one individual did report occasional contacts in which receptive anal sex — getting fucked — occurred. The researchers believe these contacts led to his seroconversion. None of the other men showed evidence of AIDS infection despite somewhat frequent oral sexual contacts, some of them in bathhouses.

In a comparison study, 36 of 99 (36%) seronegative men who did practice receptive anal sex in more than 25% of their sexual contacts seroconverted during the same period of time.

Gay and bisexual men should not use this report to abandon their safe sex activities. The study confirms what was already known: that receptive anal sex (without the use of condoms) with many partners presents the highest risk for sexual transmission of the AIDS virus. The data does strongly suggest that oral sex presents a lower risk for exposure. As the researchers assert, "We know of no study that has implicated any oral sexual activity as the mode of transmission in male homosexuals." When the Vancouver researchers tried to analyze the risk factors implicated in AIDS exposure to gay men, they found that any apparent risk from oral sex was compounded by other risk factors, such as anal sex and numbers of partners. Using statistical analysis to separate these factors, no risk associated with oral sex was detected.

The Canadian researchers clearly assert that "the isolation of HTLV-3 in a body fluid or tissue does not prove that the fluid or tissue represents a mode of transmission." Important factors which determine whether infection is transmitted include the concentration of the virus in the fluid, access to the blood stream and the presence of both receptive cells for infection and natural defenses to thwart infection. Contact with an infected fluid, therefore, does not guarantee infection.

AIDS Outreach to People of Color

The San Francisco AIDS Foundation has begun distribution of an attractive new risk reduction brochure developed specifically for people of color. Inside the brochure the need for this special effort is clearly stated: "Two out of five Americans with AIDS are Black, Latino, Asian, American Indian and other people of color. Among women, half are Black and one in five are Latina. More than four out of five U.S. children with AIDS are born to people of color." The brochure, written by the Third World AIDS Advisory Task Force, is one example of increased efforts by the Foundation to address the needs of all population groups at risk for AIDS. Ernesto Hinojos, staff member at the Foundation, has played an important role in developing the outreach program, which will also include special workshops and bus placards.

THINKING OUT LOUD

By TOM WADDELL, M.D.

Now that the weather is more accommodating, one of my great pleasures is to hand out information at Hibernia Beach about the Gay Games. It presents some rare opportunities to chat with friends and acquaintances, plus it's a pleasant and productive way to serve the news about the Games.

Several weeks ago I was out there having fun and working the corner with S.P.I.'s Sister Chanel 2001, Sister Vicious Power-Hungry Bitch and Sister Sadie, Sadie the Rabbi Lady. I had been offering information pamphlets wrapped around a leaflet which advertised the Sisters' upcoming Gay Games Preview and extravaganza on April 5 at Kezar Pavilion. I would say that about half of the people I encountered expressed some interest in the upcoming Games, whether or not they had actually heard of them previously. The other half of the crowd did a lot of curious things, mostly to avoid having to accept something to read that had a point of view. Some were annoyed at the intrusion and let their facial expressions convey that message. Some would look the other way and pretend we didn't exist. Some would step off the sidewalk to avoid us completely and others would shake their heads and say, "NO!" Once in a while someone would say with a smile, "No, thank you."

Keep in mind that there were at least four other organizations leafletting and selling spin-offs, so a casual visitor literally had to run the gauntlet past Hibernia Beach and only the impervious stalwart would emerge from the other end without some missive tucked under an arm.

Things can become hostile too. I generally would show the pamphlet and say, "Would you like some information on the Gay Games?" and then anticipate some body language indicating whether I should pursue it any further. One individual snapped, "No, I don't want to know anything about your games." Another said, "Gay Games?" then nudged his friend and continued, "What are they? Drag races?"

One thing becomes obvious when working "The Beach." It provides a great opportunity to see and get a sense of our subculture and its preoccupations. It is a good place to assess how effective one's efforts are to bring news and information to the community.

It is clear that many of the thousands of gay people living in San Francisco have never heard of the Gay Games. And I don't mean that they don't know what the Games are about, I mean THEY NEVER HEARD OF THEM.

It is frustrating to believe in something and work for something that has all sorts of potential benefits, and then discover that others may not share that belief, or simply aren't interested. It is frustrating, but quite understandable. How easy it is to feel hurt and disappointed, but the real problem goes far beyond a sense of childish recrimination. The question that needs to be answered is: "HOW DO WE REACH GAY PEOPLE?"

We send out thousands of brochures, we talk to thousands of people, we try to make the news, and still I would guess that less than 1% of the 25-million gay people in the United States have ever heard of the Games. Not that 250,000 is a small figure, but when we think in terms of a unified subculture, it is a miniscule number. There simply is no means for rapid, national dissemination of news and issues of specific interest to the gay community.

In San Francisco, the best way to get news out and around is probably word of mouth, followed by the gay press, followed by...what?

There certainly are some large national gay organizations with large mailing lists, but how many people are they reaching? Plus, they are usually single-issue communications. The Advocate purportedly has a distribution of 70,000 with a multiplier factor of about 3, totalling 210,000. How many of those readers are women? How many are Black? How many are elderly?

Occasionally there is some gay news in the straight press, but it is usually sensational and negative. Invariably the item is written by non-gay writers who simply do not write from a gay perspective. Even gays who are in a position to write from a gay perspective avoid doing so in the guise of "being objective" (translation: remunerative journalism). Let's face it: the straight press doesn't want to believe there is a legitimate gay perspective.

Isn't it amazing how thrilled we are whenever an openly gay person is actually given space or air-time or is recognized as having something important or intelligent to say?

Of course, there are many problems in circulating the news of the Games. Where does the press release go? In the sports pages? How many gays read the sports pages? And forget the Chronicle ever seeing the Gay Games as anything but amateurism.

Television? The last time the Games were mentioned on TV was in 1982 when Randy Schandaville was trying to explain that the media ignored the competition because it was only slightly better than high school. Well, who ever heard of sport as representing something of social value? (The Greeks, that's who.)

So when I speak at a gathering, I can always anticipate someone's angry question: "Why haven't we heard about the Games before this?" I always have the same response. "How do we reach you?"

Take Back the Night March to Stop Rape

Bay Area women will Take Back the Night in San Francisco on April 26, 1986. This year San Francisco Women Against Rape (SF WAR) is initiating the first Take Back the Night March and Rally in several years. It will begin at the Panhandle in Golden Gate Park at dark, and proceed through the Haight and down Castro and 18th Streets to a rally in Dolores Park. Thousands of individuals and contingents of Bay Area women are expected to march to protest the fear and violence invading women's lives and to affirm the power of women acting together.

"This march celebrates diversity among women, transcending differences which sometimes divide," explains SF WAR coordinator Shawn Come. "Violence and the fear of violence affects all women. Women marching together April 26 will experience the freedom and exhilaration of walking the streets together with confidence."

Women participate in the march for many reasons. "Take Back the Night provides a channel for women's rage," volunteer Shelly Pilo says. "Women cannot go where we please when we please. I cannot take a walk in the park at night. I am marching because I do not accept the status quo."

Men may participate in the march, but they are asked to march behind the women because women are the primary targets of sexual assault. According to organizer Shawn Come, "Women as a class of people are victimized by men. This march is a statement of power and visibility of women. It is not a denial that other groups and individuals are violated."

SF WAR is organizing the march with the belief that women begin to fight back as a group by banding together in celebration of women's power and resistance to violence. For more information about Take Back the Night this April 26, call San Francisco Women Against Rape at 861-2024.

National Conference on Lesbian/Gay Health in D.C. — 500 Attend

By Michael Helquist

W

ASHINGTON, D.C.: The AIDS epidemic has brought lesbian/gay health care into the mainstream of American medicine, according to speakers at a recent national gay health conference, but with this development have come escalating challenges to civil rights, health care delivery and the gay movement itself. And although AIDS dominates the concerns of the country's lesbian and gay population, other problems such as the high rate of substance abuse among gay people have emerged as critical issues.

"As a community we've never been more challenged by a single event," observed Caitlin Ryan, president of the National Lesbian/Gay Health Foundation (NLGHF).

More than 500 lesbian and gay health care providers gathered in Washington, D.C., on March 13-16 to assess the health status of gay and lesbian Americans. The three-day conference was co-sponsored by NLGHF, George Washington University Medical Center, the National Institutes for Health, and the Centers for Disease Control. In addition to the American conference participants from 45 states, two dozen representatives from ten countries presented the status of AIDS internationally. The Fourth National AIDS Forum coincided with this, the seventh, national health conference.

In her keynote address to the conference, former Massachusetts state legislator Elaine Nobel challenged gay people to come out of the closet. "We know that this is not a safe world for us, but we did not come into it for hiding," Nobel advised. "We will all be better if we take risks."

Nobel was the nation's first lesbian to acknowledge her sexual preference while seeking public office. She was elected twice to the state legislature. Nobel addressed another health crisis for gay people, one that has directly touched her life.

"I have struggled with and have now achieved control of my problem with alcoholism and drug abuse," Nobel revealed. She explained that her difficulties prompted her to help establish substance abuse service programs for other gay people. Nobel is now the president of the Pride Institute, a new inpatient care facility in Minneapolis, designed to treat the substance abuse problems of lesbians and gay men. Experts estimate that one-third of all gay people in the United States have problems with alcohol and drug abuse; in comparison the rate is one-tenth for the general population.

Nobel and others at the conference emphasized that substance abuse weakens overall health and may act as a contributing factor in the development of AIDS conditions.

Blood Test Controversy

On the second day of the conference, a Centers for Disease Control announcement that people in high risk groups should submit to regular blood tests to detect infection with the AIDS virus generated anger and anxiety among the participants. Representatives from several of the nation's AIDS organizations issued a statement opposing "any participation in a mass HTLV-3 testing program."

The representatives asserted that the AIDS antibody test is not a diagnostic device and should not be used as one. They also argued that since no medical treatment is available for those who test positive, resources should not be diverted from basic education efforts and counseling programs already shown to be effective in changing behavior among high risk populations. Supporters of the testing believe that individuals who test positive will feel highly motivated to change their behaviors lower their risk, and refrain from spreading the virus. Conference participants countered that "there is no proven positive correlation between knowing antibody status and changing behavior."

A second statement from the conference dealt with another controversial issue, pornography and the portrayal of high risk sexual activities in erotic materials. Those who signed the statement said they recognized that "erotic media is an important means by which many people learn and reinforce the patterns of their sexual expression." As a result, the group encouraged "the erotica industry to join with us, because we believe that together we can be more effective in the AIDS prevention effort." The statement expressed concern as well about the risks facing actors and models who work in the sex industry.

Challenge from Minorities

"If you do not help, we will organize ourselves and go after our own money, and we will fight you if necessary," warned Manuel Fimbres from San Jose State University. Fimbres offered cooperation with the gay-identified AIDS organizations but indicated that there have been very few attempts to date to reach people of color with AIDS education and information. He concluded, "We may not win the battle for funds, but we will embarrass you."

Calu Lester of San Francisco's Shanti Project suggested that there exists a "conspiracy of silence" between the minority communities who fail to recognize the existence of drug abuse and homosexuality in their midst and the AIDS organizations who fail to develop effective outreach to minorities.

"Each one of you in the audience can tell ten people every day for a month that 80% of the pediatric AIDS cases occur among Black and Brown children," Lester exhorted.

Gloria Rodriguez, a social worker for the state health department of New Jersey, voiced similar concerns. "Our communities are not being informed," she said. She explained that people of color fear that AIDS will keep them from joining mainstream American society.

Rodriguez, who is of Cuban descent, asserted that community-based AIDS groups, many of them gay-identified, must find new ways to reach people of color.

"Translating risk reduction brochures into Spanish is not enough," she noted. "That and nothing is the same thing."

Several staff members of AIDS organizations said privately that they were "about ready to give up" on minority outreach. They expressed frequent frustration at not being able to interest minority groups in their outreach plans. David Jolley, gay rights activist and AIDS worker from North Carolina, commented that the minority outreach issue could become "explosive" for AIDS organizations around the country.

International Concern

Many of the 24 participants from foreign countries — representatives from Canada, Australia and eight European nations — expressed disappointment and resentment that their concerns and ideas had received so little attention from the conference organizers. Several received notices of the conference too late to submit proposals for making presentations. As a result, the representatives met as a group a day after the conference concluded, and only two American observers were present.

Several of the representatives said the incidence of AIDS in their countries is only two to three years behind the rate of increase experienced in the United States. Ultimately, AIDS is expected to become a major problem in each of the European nations. Iain Mackie, MD, who works with the AIDS Committee of London, Ontario, observed that Canada's current 500 AIDS cases is equivalent to 5000 cases in the United States, when the differences in population are taken into account.

Few national governments have provided funding for AIDS education, with the exception of Switzerland and Australia. Several participants said they found the workshops encouraging safe sex practices helpful because very little had been done in their countries in this area. The international representatives toyed with the idea of forming an international AIDS organization, but they finally decided that the action was premature since so many countries had yet to form their own national organizations. They did decide that future AIDS conferences, whoever sponsors them, should include representatives from Asian and South American countries.

Conference organizers announced that the next annual meeting will be held in Los Angeles.

Plexus Faces Financial Crisis

Plexus, the West Coast's oldest women's newspaper, is facing a financial crisis so severe that for the first time in 12 years the newspaper is suspending publication for one month.

Plexus will not publish an April edition; however, a May edition is planned.

Founded in 1974, Plexus is one of three nationally-circulated women's newspapers more than ten years old and still publishing monthly in the United States. The other two newspapers are Sojourner of Boston and Off Our Backs of Washington, D.C.

The decision to cancel the April edition came after a careful examination of finances. "The women's press, like all newspapers, operates on a very tiny profit margin. In the past year, the economic problems faced by Plexus escalated until they reached this financial crisis we're now facing," explains Lisa Beck, a Plexus editor. "We are using these few weeks, while publication is suspended, to determine the best way to raise funds that will make Plexus self-sufficient once again."

Financial problems are common to the women's media, with several newspapers, periodicals and presses closing in recent years. Keeping Plexus in publication is a priority. "We feel the women's community across the country needs an active women's media and that we cannot afford to lose one publication," Beck says, adding that Plexus is "a survivor newspaper" that has overcome hardships in the past.

An emergency fundraising campaign is being launched to raise funds that will enable Plexus to publish in May. Long range fundraising activities are also being planned to benefit the newspaper. "What we need most now are women willing to donate whatever ideas, energy and money they have available to keep Plexus going," says Beck. "Women's energy built Plexus and kept it growing and operational all these years. We need that energy more than ever now."

Donations to Plexus, which are not tax-deductible, may be sent to the newspaper at 545 Athol Ave., Oakland 94606. Women able to participate in fundraising activities, or who would like to learn more about Plexus, should call the newspaper office at 451-2585. The office is open from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m. weekdays.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By JACK FERTIG

By Stella Dominatrix

This month, Halley's Comet will enter Sagittarius. You may think that means it was in Scorpio this last month (which would certainly explain a lot!), but Halley's Comet is always retrograde (which certainly does explain a lot!) so of course (huh?) the Comet has been in Capricorn, which explains everything!

But what does it all mean?

Halley's Comet returns to the inner part of the solar system after its 76-year trek through transplanetary reaches of outer space, which is traditionally, in ancient hermetic writings, referred to as the ozone. (This is not to be confused with the "ozone" of scientific terminology. "Debunkers" often try to cart that one out to demonstrate that we don't know what we're talking about. But they only demonstrate that they don't know what we're talking about. Of course, if they did, they'd be out of work. All they do is trot out the same tired arguments that we've refuted a hundred times, and it really bites my ass sometimes, but it gives them work and us publicity so I guess it's really OK. Now what were we talking about? Oh, yeah....)

Comets don't rule anything. Halley's Comet takes orders very nicely, though, but it's slow on coffee refills and be sure to check the addition on your tab.

The ever-retrograde perturbations (that's an important key word!) of Halley's Comet are certain to have a tremendous impact on everything they touch. Thank Goddess the comet's not coming within millions and millions of miles of actually touching anything. In other orbits it has come so close that the world passed through its tail. This has occurred twice in recorded history and many times in the Barracks through most of the mid-'70s. This month, Halley's Comet will conjunct Uranus which sounds like it could be the same thing, but it's not.

Because Halley's Comet is moving quickly backwards (not unlike this column) you will have to use a semi-simple arithmetic formula to determine the date that it crosses over from your sun sign to your moon sign. If one is in Sagittarius and the other is in Leo, the crossing will be made in a bold, flamboyant style. This is what we call the grand cross. If one of your luminaries is in Pisces and the other is in Gemini, it will be a double cross. Now this formula is really very easy. Just take it one step at a time:

Take the number of months with 31 days, divide that by the 12th power of your birthday on the Mayan calendar, add the square root of pi and multiply the sum by the next prime number after the population of West Hollywood. Add up the digits in the answer, and that is the day in June that it will snow.

SUN SIGNS

Aries: Discovering that you and your boss have severely conflicting ideas concerning your career direction, you decide to go back to school and major in some field for which you are eminently unsuited. All this misplaced effort to manage your own life will bring you to a crisis of faith which will reveal that you have none. But it doesn't matter because you can get by on guts alone. Fortunately, tripe is cheap.

Taurus: Newfound religious beliefs bring you back to face lingering issues left unresolved by your last ex. You will have to resume the relationship so you can break up again in a more healing fashion. Mystic explorations will help you to overcome the fact that one of you is dead. (It could be either one of you, but chances are you're projecting.)

Gemini: Your lover invites you to try out new techniques, but wants you to take all the initiative. We all know that he's just avoiding responsibility. Even so, you can save the relationship by feeling flattered. Let your imagination go wild and set a fantasy scene to spark your lover's interest. Science fiction novels left in your bathroom sink provide a clue, but don't try to excite your partner with an extra-terrestrial costume or you may be sued for alienation of affections.

Cancer: Your significant other and a new, not-so-significant other, decide at the same time to drop in on you at work and take you to lunch. This prediction is absolutely certain to come true, unless they meet on the way, compare notes, and start making secret plans to leave you for each other.

Leo: Having brought your work home, you find yourself having all kinds of unimagined fun with it. Perhaps you're folding it all into paper planes and dive-bombing your lover's Pekinese. Consider that this may be a sublimation of anger directed at your lover or boss. You can resolve these issues much more simply by inviting the whole office for a party while your lover is going through high colonics.

Virgo: Domestic life becomes more than interesting when you finally decide to clean house and discover your roommate has started selling stock options by mail-order, and that she has a number of papers listing you as a 51% owner of Treasure Island along with a plane ticket to Peru. Machu Picchu is lovely this time of year. Don't hurry back.

Libra: Shortly after discovering that your home used to be the residence of Emily Dickinson's grand-niece, you discover some old papers alluding to some important, but alas misplaced, writings from "Aunt E." After turning the house topsy-turvy, you finally turn up what turns out to be Aunt Esther's championship bowling scores.

Scorpio: After hemming and hawing for so long, you finally decide to open all those bills and notices that have been coming in your mail. To make a long and ugly story very short, you will have to balance your bank book (after how long, now?). Through many days of arduous efforts you finally get it in shape only to learn that your bank closed down three months ago, and the deposits you've mailed in are being attached by the I.R.S. and your other creditors. This would otherwise be a good time to explore new possibilities with clothing and self-expression. Best to go incognito 'til it all blows over.

Sagittarius: You will inherit massive amounts of money, but with the proviso that it all be spent on new clothing, make-up and cosmetic surgery. You've always wanted to fit a more moderate size, so this is your opportunity to become a transmuted. Thus your new look will not only knock 'em dead, but they'll still be able to talk to you and through you. A Gemini ancestor will rap three times, but she's lying.

Capricorn: Usually sure and confident in the world's many challenges, you now become uncertain about yourself and slip uneasily through disturbing images from your past in this life and others. Your friends offer to help, but you feel that you'd rather be alone so they let you be. Your total isolation, withdrawal and hospitalization for schizophrenic catatonia proves a blessing in disguise as your new friends in the nuthouse understand you better than your old crowd ever did.

Aquarius: Your open eagerness to introduce new and exciting subjects helps to lead all your friends into past-life regression. You can in this month become quite adept in the guided meditations that lead people through the centuries of their lost pasts. All this proves very exciting and enlightening until they all realize that they were High Priestesses of Atlantis and you were the dummy who sunk the island. You will find refuge in your work until your boss discovers that in her last life she was Jean Paul Marat and you were Charlotte Corday.

Pisces: Influential friends, eager to help out your career, tell your boss all about your tremendous sense of creative whimsey and your unfailingly expansive generosity. Unfortunately your expense account is being audited and your company is looking for an embezzler. Your immediate supervisor is actually the guilty party, but he's framed you flawlessly. If you stick around, you'll be convicted for crimes you didn't commit, so you may as well take the money and run.

"Being a Shanti volunteer can be hard"

Al Harris
Shanti Practical Support Volunteer

Because dealing with AIDS is hard. I came to Shanti angry. I came afraid of sickness and death and isolation. People with AIDS don't have the option to get involved like I do.

As a Practical Support Volunteer I do little things that make a difference. I do laundry or clean an apartment; I run errands or read; I hold a hand and I listen. Little things for me can be major for someone with AIDS. I've learned to appreciate the value of little things. I feel like I'm doing something and that helps me.

THEATRE

Levitation

Reviewed by Mario Mondelli

The script selection process at Theatre Rhinoceros must have undergone a drastic overhaul. While the zany gay sitcoms of earlier seasons served their purpose (their camp repartee provided familiar, if not particularly challenging, fare), the same audience those plays helped create has understandably grown restless with lightweight entertainment; for the Rhino audience, mere escapism is less practical than it used to be. Theatre Rhino's recent selections have attempted to meet this new sensibility head on, and after a number of false starts, they've begun to find their footing. I don't want to overpraise Levitation; this is a solid production of an adequate script, even if there's not much in it that stays with you afterward. But Timothy Mason's play is ideally matched to Rhino's strengths, making this another in a string of recent productions that validates this theatre's reputation as the nation's foremost gay theatre.

In Levitation, Joe, a journalist, returns to his childhood home in Minneapolis to spend more time with his parents. He's been obsessing on the prospect of their death (though it doesn't seem to be impending), so much so that he has decided to leave Manhattan to move back in with them. After a long night out, he returns to the house to find his father on the lawn in his robe, looking for shooting stars. From the start, Mason's knack for dialogue helps us feel at home in this tranquil setting; we're comfortable with Levitation's cast even as they become increasingly peculiar. Padding about in pajamas and bathrobes, they seem harmlessly familiar despite their quirks (they appear to be introduced in order of eccentricity), and by the time the last two unlikely characters are introduced, we share Joe's journalistic curiosity regarding their who, how and why. Unfortunately, the script's biggest weakness is its explanation of their presence. Mason tosses in obtrusive bits of metaphysical nonsense about the "speed of memory" which he then leaves hanging; it's there to needlessly justify the dramatic device at the core of the piece. When we learn that Joe is spending a few hours with figures from his and others' memories, it's enough justification; Mason didn't need to go any further than that, not in the age of E.T. and Close Encounters. In the movie Autumn Leaves, a sage Joan Crawford tells neurotic Cliff Robertson that "the present is made of bits of the past." Mason tarts this message up with off-beat characters similar to those in Lanford Wilson's work, and throws in a dash of cosmic wonder. The resulting mixture is most satisfying when it sidesteps pretension.

This cast rescues some of the play's weaker scenes, and in its best-written sections, they positively shine. As Joe's parents, Edward Ivory and Helen Petit are the dotty Mom and Pop of long distance commercials; Mother foists mugs of hot milk on the insomniac group, mindless of the temperature, and Dad's homey, half-assed folk wisdom has a Reaganesque quality — you know he's wrong but it's so, you know, cute. Joe's knee-jerk liberal sister Jean (Susan Allen) and her wisecracking son Michael (Timothy M. Cavanaugh) provide the evening's requisite familial tensions; her assertion that Joe wastes his potential in a "dead-end lifestyle" provokes a shouting match that's one of the play's better moments. It's refereed by Ira, Joe's current flame from the East Coast, whose New York Jewish sensibility is an ideal counterpoint to the Minnesota mentality. Chuck Kubick appreciates the audience's identification with his role; his Ira is an amused Alice in this Norman Rockwell wonderland. Unfortunately, a number of his lines get lost; he has a strange, cinematic approach to emotional speeches: he whispers them to his feet. As Orville, Lorenzo Glover's appearances are charmingly absurdist, and his underplaying what's still to come elevates his role. This leaves a retired schoolteacher, Inga, a white-haired dispenser of grandmotherly advice. Jane MacFagan gives this plum part just the right combination of wisdom and naivete; she's patently irresistible. It should be noted that Rhino's repertory schedule limits any one play's rehearsal time, but this cast overcomes that limitation. The ensemble acting here is extraordinary.

The fear of being abandoned by the people you love is a powerful force, and Chuck Solomon has the rare experience of having lived it from both sides. Solomon's direction wrings more from this play than seems possible. In his hands, Levitation is invested with aliveness and poignancy that help transcend its shaky structure. There's really no substitute for this kind of professionalism; Solomon has become the unspoken star of his work. Audiences have begun coming to his productions on faith, the same way they might pick up an unknown literary work for its author's reputation. Once again, Solomon earns this kind of respect.

This season at Theatre Rhinoceros included some of their best shows ever (with the notable exception of Deathtrap). The updated AIDS show, Unfinished Business, was a tight, timely revue, and their last production, And Baby Makes Seven, had a quiet charm reminiscent of the best Truffaut movies. Levitation is as good a play as any local theatre has offered this season; with it, Rhino firmly reestablishes its commitment to its primary audience, and that's an adjustment that's been long overdue. At Theatre Rhino, 2926 16th St, SF, through 4/13. Information/reservations: 861-5079.

Deer Rose

Reviewed by Gene Price

While experimental in its multimedia concept, Deer Rose, Tony Pellegrino's play with masks, boldly attacks a theme we all have to a face: the death of a parent.

For sculptor and mask-maker Pellegrino, the play was a private catharsis, an exorcism of the demons of memory. It is pure theater, told in flashback scenes enacted on expressionistic sets by actors, always masked and sometimes on towering stilts. Dialogue and song are supplied by actors Laurie Amat and Barney Jones, who stand off to one side.

Billy, a California artist, has been called back to Cleveland to nurse his mother, who is dying of cancer. A shrill, selfish, indifferent parent when he was growing up, Rose alienated both child and husband.

It is a tenuous reconciliation. But how subtly the roles reverse! Now it is the mother who whines for a glass of water at bedtime. Now it is the son who must cajole the childish parent into taking a bath. And as phrases touch off painful memories, those horrendous domestic scenes are re-enacted by Billy and Rose's alter egos from behind a scrim: Billy at 3 and at 30, Rose at 33 and 60.

But reconciliation does come in a moving deathbed scene. They look at each other and tentatively touch as their vocal counterparts sing a simply stated "I Love You."

For all its fine points, Deer Rose is not a perfect play. It is overlong, especially in the opening scene which establishes the mother's chain-smoking as well as her soap opera and junk food addictions. I found the ritualistic, grief-stricken dance at her death somewhat self-conscious. But visually it is a treat. The masks of Billy at different ages are marvelous cartoons. The enormous rocking horse at age 3 (trimmed with branches to make it a Christmas reindeer) shrinks to a conventional toy by age 30.

Jan Marie Baldwin, Bill Gentner, Jan Kirsch, Brook Klehm and Jan Zvaifler play Rose, Billy, the Reindeer (death spirit) and other characters at various ages. Amy Mueller directs, Emily Klion composed the score, Laurie Polster designed sets and props, Lydia Tanji designed the unique costumes, Ellen Shireman designed lighting, and Barney Jones and Jim McKee provided sound design.

Deer Rose has closed temporarily but will reopen later this spring. Watch for it. It's a seldom realized theatrical experience.

In the House of the Blues

Reviewed by Lionel Cuffie

In the House of the Blues, a cabaret musical that has received nothing but acclaim during its runs in Denver, Chicago, New York and Montreal, opened to a full house on March 21 at the Lorraine Hansberry Theatre's handsome new auditorium in the Zephyr Theater Complex.

The "play" begins in the present with Melody (Velina Brown), a young Black woman, inheriting a blues club from her aunt. She travels south with her companion M.C. (Jonathan Wayne Wilson) to inspect the property.

The meticulous heiress surveys the ruin and rubble of her inheritance. She is none too impressed and decides to sell the bar. M.C.

vivacious Bosco Searcy. Having recently arrived from New York, Searcy has already established a reputation among Bay Area dancers. He currently works with Marsha Wales and Madame Lanova of the Ballet Theatre of San Francisco.

The multi-talented Margarette Robinson, whose bawdy performance as Ma Rainey and hilarious shenanigans as Susie in the burlesque team of shenanigans and Susie, alone would have certainly been worth the price of a ticket. What a powerhouse of a voice! What a storehouse of talent! She'd make a great addition to any musical.

Osumare's work at times reaches the pinnacle of verve and originality, such as her choreography of Ma Rainey's entrance or the point in the revue when she sends three dancers cakewalking across a vaudeville stage.

presses her not to, and then, materializing from under the bar, the fair-skinned, wavy-haired Mr. Blues tries his hand at persuading Melody to keep the bar and her heritage. He summons forth an array of ghosts of former performers who present a series of delightful tableaux which writer David Charles presents as an aspect of blues history. The audience is offered interpretations of some great music and dance from Ma Rainey, Mamie Smith, Alberta Hunter, Victoria Spivey, Billie Holiday and, of course, Bessie Smith. (Curiously, none of the pieces is attributed in the program. Yet some of Eubie Blake, Fats Waller and other composers' tunes are easily recognizable.)

Bessie Smith (Denise Perrier) makes her entrance rather regally halfway through the first act. Perrier, a statuesque, bronze-skinned woman wearing a lavender lace gown, diamonds hanging from her neck to her knees and a silver lame headband adorned with ostrich feathers, captures the soul of those glamorous shows.

Although an internationally known jazz stylist, Perrier (who, happily for us, makes her home base here) is no stranger to the blues. Her powerful, sensuous alto moaned and groaned, bringing a new flair and polish to old material.

The other performers in this 11-member cast play double- and sometimes triple-duty. All of them — Mary E. Jacobs, Deborah Swisher, Amara Tabor, Rickey Le Blanc and B.J. Tidwell — are sensational as Mamie Smith, Alberta Hunter, Victoria Spivey, Billie Holiday, or when they perform in ensemble. Their objective is not so much to render exact imitations as it is to give the audience the spirit of the times.

Halifu Osumare of Oakland choreographed the revue, and special mention should be made of the work she did with the elegant and

She does, however, have her pedestrian moments, but these I believe reflect on the structure of the revue rather than on Osumare's talents.

In the House of the Blues is essentially a play within a play. Mr. Blues and other characters often assume a role outside the revue and comment on blues history. They take it upon themselves to explain or discuss the background of the stars or the events of the day that affected their lives. These interludes can become lengthy and polemical. What is a choreographer to do? What are the other performers to do when the writer stops the action of the play to preach to the audience?

I suggest cutting these narrative interludes back to the bare bones, limiting some of the repetitious sounding music — and voilà! The choreographer's problems could be solved instantly. Another solution would be to make the interlude cuts and allow the musicians Ron Wilson (reeds), Gene Gilbeaux (piano), Joe McKinley (bass) and George T. Hearst (drums) to play a larger role in the revue. They all have chops; I've heard them before. As it stands now, the musicians are relegated behind a scrim and play a minimal supporting role.

Without costume designer Diane Daughter's unerringly correct period clothing and Mark Loring's flexible setting of the stage with its several prosceniums and side doors, director Buddy Butler could hardly have recreated the ambience of the twenties and thirties nightclubs and vaudeville stages as successfully as he in fact did.

In the House of the Blues fairly jumps with excitement. If you're out for an evening of high-stepping and glitz and glam, by all means GO! through April 27, Thursday through Sunday at the Zephyr Theatre Complex (25 Van Ness Avenue at Market, SF); 474-8800.

The Mikado

Gilbert and Sullivan lovers, arise. The Lamplighters have opened their 34th season with a resounding hit. The Mikado soars and Beaver Bauer's costumes float like a field of pastel butterflies.

Nanki-Poo loves Yum-Yum — but so does Ko-Ko. Katisha loves Nanki-Poo and nobody loves Katisha. And that's the plot, except for an occasional half-hearted threat of decapitation.

Directed by Arthur Conrad with the fresh approach of a world premiere, this 100-year-old musical is a visual treat. The note-perfect cast is led off by Frank Ryken as Nanki-Poo. Polished comedian Rick Williams is Lord High Executioner, William Neil is Pooh-Bah (Lord High Everything Else), and Judy Wing is Yum-Yum. Marcia Hunt is an imposing Katisha (if not overpowering in her Noh drama wig and somewhat inconsistent costume). Her rich contralto is responsible for the evening's most impressive and moving solo aria.

John Ziaja is properly regal as the Mikado (though his costume, too, might well have been designed by Picasso for a non-dancing ballet role). Yum-Yum's sisters are sung by Shelley Lynn Johnson (Pitti-Sing) and Barbara Heroux (Peep-Bo); Pish-Tush by William Neely.

The gags, both ancient and timeless, still prove irresistible, and the lilting patter songs tumble across the footlights, one after another, practically inviting the audience to sing along.

Gilbert Russak conducts. Sets by Jerry D. Gere and lighting by Ron Bacon. All major roles are double cast.

Susan Parks, sets off around the world to find true love, and the visual puns come tumbling out of the wings with the first bars of each new song. Mention a honeymoon and you've got it — a jar of honey dancing with a moon; mention a pizza and out pops Val Diamond under a giant pizza hat (with everything) to warble "That's Amore."

Bob Kastenek as King Tut joins a chorus of mummy dancers for a toe-tapping version of Jolson's "Mummy." There's Queen Elizabeth, and the Beatles, and Dorothy's back as Mary Poppins. Nobody remains on stage longer than a TV commercial, so don't bother switching channels — Val will be right back. She's the star in a show without stars. Silver has wisely reinstated her fine number, "City Lights," and her big belter this year is "You Make Me Feel Like a Natural Woman." She can't help stopping the show.

Then it's back to Dexter DeVoe's triumphant parody of Prince, Trisha Gooch's Dr. Ruth Westheimer, Renee Lubin's rousing "Handyman," and a "We Are the World" lineup with a Stevie Wonder bit that's the funniest gag in the show.

And who does Dorothy find at the end of her rainbow? Who else? Bruce Springsteen.

Phil Piserchio as The Boss is totally wired. He's superb.

If I've forgotten anyone or screwed up the numbers, I'm sorry. I've only got two eyes and two ears. On points this is the best BBB in several years. Get up a party and go!

Pump Boys and Dinettes

Reviewed by Gene Price

Somewhere along Route 57, Pump Boys and Dinettes took a wrong turn. It ended up at the Curran. This simple-minded, country-western, pump rock musical — pleasant as it may have been in some off-Broadway boite — loses its intimate appeal in a real theater. Unfortunately, intimacy and a down-home willingness to please is about all it's got going for it. How it went from cabaret to off-Broadway to Broadway (where it won a Tony nomination) is a puzzlement.

On one side of the stage there's this here gas station and some good ole boys who keep jumping up to sing. On the other side there's this Double Cupp Diner and a couple of Dinettes who, when they're not poppin' pecan pies in the oven, are poppin' out in front of the counter to sing about menu items and their menfolks. So it's kind of like a blue plate special of some warmed over meatloaf, lumpy mashed potatoes and canned peas. Combread on the side.

Of the original cast, only John Schimmel appears in this production and is credited with contributing to one song, "Taking it Slow." Five other original cast members contributed the additional 18 songs in the show, most of which had such titles as "Catfish," "Drinkin' Shoes," and, the best of its genre, "Farmer Tan." I confess I liked a number called "Sister," sung by the Dinettes, presumably about their relationship. On the other hand, one had the impression that they had never met before the curtain went up. And I reckon that's what was wrong with the whole shebang. Nobody on stage seemed to be having any fun except L.M. (Guy Strobel) who brought the show to thigh-slapping heights with "The Night Dolly Parton was Almost Mine." Jason Edwards has a nice voice and some impressive dimples, and he almost got the show into gear with his solo, "Mamaw" — but it slipped out again.

Critics Circle Awards Gala

The ninth annual awards ceremony of the Bay Area Theatre Critics Circle will take place Monday, April 7, 8 p.m. at the Marines Memorial Theatre.

Tokens, the play about the London plague, took top honors with ten nominations, and Sam Shepard's rock-drama, Tooth of Crime, garnered nine nominations for outstanding performance in 1985. Rarearea, Execution of Justice (Emily Mann's Dan White drama), and Fen followed with seven nominations each.

Fifteen voting Circle critics from various Bay Area media saw a total of 98 productions from which 186 individual nominations were made.

Special awards have been voted by the Circle to The Color Purple star Danny Glover (the "Native Son" award), to Marrian Walters in recognition of her eleventh acting season with ACT, and to the One Act Theatre Company for its brown bag lunchtime theater program.

Tickets are available at Eureka, Marines Memorial, Magic and One Act Theaters and at all BASS outlets. For further information, call 864-6279.

It was a festive evening at the California Club on March 10, 1986. San Francisco's "finest" came out — journalists, writers, directors, critics, actors, film people, entertainers, friends and family of Chuck Solomon — to pay tribute to one of San Francisco's favorite sons. It was Chuck's 40th birthday, a black-tie event, and many of the men and women appeared in tux, in conventional and unconventional drag. A film crew was there filming the party, interviewing the guests and documenting the entertainment. Three hundred people attended, and at least as many had to be turned away for lack of space. So many people were there paying tribute to Chuck Solomon, not to a star, but to the man, the teacher, the friend.

Chuck has been a major figure in the San Francisco gay theatre community for the past decade. His current production, Levitation, recently opened to excellent reviews at Theatre Rhinoceros. The evening was a celebration of community, love and life itself. This past year, Chuck was diagnosed with AIDS.

The subject of AIDS was never mentioned but was perpetually present in everyone's minds. When co-emcee Doris Fish, in her inimitable ironic style, toasted Chuck from the stage — "It's so inspiring to us, Chuck, your commitment to living and to chain-smoking" — the audience was in an uproar. And when Camille Duncan, as Dionne Warwick, sang "I know I'll never love this way again, so I keep holding on, until the good is gone..." tears came to many eyes. As Chuck had predicted in a pre-party video interview, there was to be much laughter and many tears. The comedy came from a variety of entertainers, including co-emcee Tom Ammiano, and staged routines by members of the San Francisco Mime Troupe. The tears came mixed with love in a stunning performance by vocalist-songwriter Esmerelda, who turned to Chuck mid-performance and articulated what so many of us were feeling: "There's so much love in this room."

And in truth, there was so much love and high energy generated all night long. The party went far beyond entertainment. One

Interviewed Chuck the next morning, after his mother and relatives had said goodbye. Chuck was fatigued but alert, direct, personable, entertaining, with savvy — all of those qualities for which he is admired. I kept thinking throughout the interview that this man has so much life force in him, so much good energy, so much knowledge, he's learned so much and has so much to share, that it doesn't seem possible that he's meant to die; he's so much in his prime. And I thought, how many more people in the audience that night had been brought face-to-face with the imminence of death themselves, and with the deaths of their friends, lovers and relatives.

of Daniel Webster in Gertrude Stein's The Mother of Us All. And I really liked acting again.

How did you first get involved with political gay theater?

One night at a performance of Mother, two men came up to me, Martin Worman and David Baker, and they said that they were helping to organize a summer workshop for gay men in theater. It sounded like fun. We started to meet regularly for four hours a day, three days a week. We were given free space at the Gay Community Center which was on Page Street. They believed in what we were doing, despite the fact that we weren't at all an organized group.

After six months of meetings we were getting very bored, so we did a half hour presentation of our "process" at the Faggots in Class Struggle Conference. Our improvisational work and our political work and artistic work all mixed together. People went wild. We thought to ourselves, "We have a future."

Did this early gay theater group have a name?

No. Trying to find the name for a group with 11 queens...I mean it was something else. I mean pages and pages and pages of names. We finally just decided to write and put on a show done in our own method. That show was Crimes Against Nature, which as far as I'm concerned was a turning point in modern gay theater. It was wonderful. We played for a year and half, selling out every night and always in different theater spaces, starting over again each time, new publicity, and there were maybe only five performances during this whole time that didn't sell out, despite all obstacles.

The comments we received from audiences were usually things like people had never seen so many men at one time touch each other with love on the stage. We received letters from all over the world. It changed people's lives, actually. And we were very proud of that. It was remarkable, it was honest, it was real, it was theater designed especially for our community. There was no exploitation at all. It was beautiful, and the whole thing could travel in the trunk of my car.

Did you take Crimes Against Nature on the road?

We mostly played the Northern California area. We did take it to New York and it played off-Broadway for 83 performances. That was a learning experience. It might have been a mistake. People thought of us as being everything from the biggest flop there ever was to being the gay For Colored Girls off-Broadway. Everybody in the group who hadn't come out to their families had to because, you see, we were sure we'd be on the cover of Time magazine. It didn't quite work out that way. Rex Reed wrote, "I loathed every minute of it." One reviewer said, "This show has nine barefooted faggots and 27 earrings." Which gives you a clue as to where we were at, at the time. We came back to San Francisco.

Were there any women in the early gay groups within which you worked?

Actually, when we came back to San Francisco from New York, we decided to expand the group to include women. It was a great decision. And this was a time when separatism was rampant.

We changed our name from the Gay Men's Theatre Collective to the Gay Theatre Collective. For some of us it was the first time in years we had really been close to women. It was a wonderful experience. After a lot of work we came up with Contents Under Pressure, which had another successful long run in 1979 and 1980. It was done at a time when there was a big increase of anti-gay violence, and this show examined the issue.

After that we worked for about a year, trying to come up with our third show. We couldn't. We actually wrote the first draft of a science fiction anti-fundamentalist drama. It just wasn't happening. So we disbanded.

But before that, we had turned away some very good people. Alan Estes, who died of AIDS a couple of years ago, had asked to join. The same thing happened with Whoopi Goldberg. While she was still living in Los Angeles, she called to say she was interested. If we had only known then what we know now! Whoopi certainly is a major talent.

Solomon appeared in "A Night in the Blue Moon" at Theatre Rhino in the early 1980s.

When did you first start working with Theatre Rhinoceros?

One of the men from Crimes, Martin Worman, was hired to direct a show called The Dear Love of Comrades, which was a musical by the Gay Sweatshop of London. It was about the life of Edward Carpenter, who was considered to be England's Walt Whitman. They were contemporaries. Carpenter was a socialist and a poet, and an openly gay man living on a communal farm outside of Sheffield with his three lovers, all named George. I was asked to play one of the Georges. That was about six years ago. And then I did more shows as an actor, although my real love is directing.

I directed two one-act plays at the Theatre Rhino Studio in its present location. One of the plays was Delivery by C.D. Arnold, the one that Sandal Hebert was in as Marilyn Monroe. Now wasn't she a spectacle at the party singing "Happy Birthday"! And the other piece was called Dressing and Undressing and Talking on the Phone, written by my friend John Barryhill from the theater collective. Those two shows won me the Drama Critic's Circle Award. That was maybe four or five years ago. I was so happy to be directing. I loved it. I knew I wouldn't have to go on stage again if I didn't want to. I wouldn't have to be an actor. My face was protected.

What was it that you didn't like about being an actor?

Well, when we were doing Crimes Against Nature, it was seen and loved by so many people that it was like being famous. You just couldn't get away from it. It was fun, but sometimes it was too much. On Castro Street, could describe the event as a kind of grand-scale communal catharsis. It was real-life drama being played out that night. Donations were collected for Shanti, the AIDS Foundation and San Francisco Hospice. In a prepared speech, Chuck delivered his favorite lines from Levitation, written by Timothy Mason, lines which could very well serve as an epitaph for Chuck himself:

I live now in people's memories, and so do you. Isn't that a thought? ...Every moment you live you're planting seeds in people's minds — seeds of yourself and they keep you alive. Not in some fixed form but always changing, because of course, there's nothing so unreliable as the human mind. But in a sense, nothing so predictable at the same time. So that although you are there always, you may become many different people. As many different people as the number of seeds you've planted.

Breaking the gravity of the situation for us, as well as for himself, he invited us all to his 50th birthday party.

How AIDS has changed us all.

I asked Chuck to tell us about himself, about his beginnings in San Francisco, about his involvement with gay theater, about living and dying with AIDS.

[Coming Up!]: Why did you come to San Francisco?

[Chuck]: I moved here in 1971 after living in Chicago and New York doing theater work. In 1968 I became a hippy, which meant marijuana and L.S.D. and my values changed a lot. I really couldn't put up with the whole scene there. The pace, the intensity, the lies of New York, ego. So I figured, I'm a gay man and I'm a hippy, and what other place was there in the whole world to be, so I moved here.

I was sick of acting, and all the parties and games that went down around that, so I didn't act for five years. I lived in a commune and had odd jobs. Up until a year ago I still lived with the same people. At some point I decided in my mind that I wanted to act again. I got a phone call within three days. Someone called and asked me to come in and read for the part

A Witchhunt Foiled: The FBI vs. NAMBLA

By the North American Man/
Boy Love Association
Paperback, 91 pp.,
NAMBLA New York, $5.95

Reviewed by Mario Mondelli

There's no single author listed on the pages of A Witchhunt Foiled: The FBI vs. NAMBLA, just the North American Man/Boy Love Association (NAMBLA) itself, though after reading it I can understand why the individuals responsible aren't eager to identify themselves. Law enforcement officials at every level of authority have terrorized NAMBLA, and they know they can get away with it; straights view pedophiles as the ultimate gay sex offenders, corruptors of youth, kidnapper perverts in pursuit of their children. But NAMBLA antagonists even include many gays who feel boy lovers hamper the progress of gay assimilation through respectability. Is there any gay person who hasn't told or laughed at a gag at NAMBLA's expense? Let's face it, they're an easy target — a community joke.

The joke sours, though, when you realize that the lack of community support for this minority-within-a-minority may have aided authorities in launching a full-scale attack on the civil, sexual and human rights of NAMBLA members and those associated with them. According to NAMBLA, these events were triggered by the 1979 disappearance of 6-year-old Etan Patz from his bus stop in Manhattan's Soho district. If you were living in New York at that time, you know Etan's face; he was given the kind of treatment usually accorded missing oil-industry heirs. For weeks, his anguished parents pleaded for his safe return on the evening news. The infamous Rupert Murdoch had only recently transformed his newest acquisition, the New York Post, into a gutter-level tabloid that thrived on the sensationalism inherent in the Patz case. The New York area was plastered with thousands of posters bearing portraits of Etan's innocent visage with "MISSING" in two-inch red letters diagonally stamped across them. Why this disappearance attracted this much more attention than that of other similar cases during the same period remains a mystery, but as time went on, the media couldn't keep the story alive (though not for lack of trying), and jaded New Yorkers gave up on poor Etan, assuming the worst. The search effort's last gasp — the reissue of the poster with the new label "STILL MISSING" — was so emotionally unsettling that it inspired a roman a def novel (and later, film) with that phrase as its title.

The Patz case looms large in the authorities' persecution of NAMBLA because following a rash of 1981/82 arrests of NAMBLA members and their teenage lovers, the police released to the media a photograph taken from one of the defendants' collections (kiddie porn was the pretext for the raids). The picture's young model bore a minimal resemblance to Etan. Yellow journalists reopened the wound with renewed fervor, especially the good old Post, which printed it on the front page with the scare headline, "Police release amazing photo and ask...IS THIS ETAN PATZ?" The Boston Herald American headline made even further inroads into journalistic irresponsibility: "DID SEX CLUB TRAP THIS BOY?"

The front-page innuendo continued in the days following, with law enforcement agencies needlessly and knowingly raising the hopes of Etan's parents in order to fuel their single-minded vendetta. Single-minded they were; the Patzes denied that the youth in the photo could be their son, noting a cleft chin that was not, they said, a trait of the Patz family. But the police, undaunted, suggested that the cleft might have been airbrushed in by NAMBLA to make the portrait more "appealing" to its members. Now NAMBLA, a 4-year-old organization of less than 500 members, was thrust into the national spotlight. Amidst allegations of endorsing child molestation, kiddie porn distribution and kidnapping, NAMBLA organizers planned a major press conference, knowing they would have this one chance to clear the confusion surrounding the photo, as well as clarify NAMBLA's purpose, and bring to light the activities of the authorities in their ersatz witchhunt.

A Witchhunt Foiled is the tale of the arrests and their victims, and of NAMBLA's subsequent vindication of itself (individually and as an organization) of charges leveled by the media, the police and the FBI. It's a small book, little more than a pamphlet, yet the authors squeeze between its covers an introduction, the title story, poetry by activist Charles Shively, NAMBLA press releases, newspaper articles and interviews, and even an excerpt from the U.S. Postal Service's report on its NAMBLA surveillance. They cram so much into the 90-odd pages that it's a challenge to follow the sequence of events as they're endlessly shuffled back and forth in reference. Individuals and events are often left hanging, and at the book's conclusion, one is left with the feeling that it was written too soon, that the real finale of the action is still a couple of years down the line.

What Witchhunt has going for it, though, is a goof-proof story of struggle and survival, one that activates the anger of even the most casual observer. The details of the events shock, inform and amuse. A sex-crimes unit lieutenant is quoted as saying that, "The big problem is getting under-age boys to testify against their male lovers. The interrogation can be intense. We've got to crack the boy and it's not an easy thing to do."

In the course of the questioning, boys whose lovers were NAMBLA members when the '82 police raids took place were roughed up, given beer to lower their resistance, verbally abused, kidnapped and held incommunicado from their parents. The adult NAMBLANS were treated far less delicately, subjected to abuses the authors define as "reminiscent of those occurring in right-wing military dictatorships."

There are lighter moments, too, such as the New Jersey detective who told one NAMBLA member, "If you people only have the FBI to worry about, you have nothing to worry about." Or the 1982 Philadelphia NAMBLA national conference, which was under such intense police surveillance that plainclothes agents outside were monitoring the meeting with the latest in long distance recording and photography equipment. The October '82 NAMBLA Bulletin reported NAMBLA's response:

A group of about seven uninhibited NAMBLANS and Philadelphia Gay Youth members sallied forth with cameras of their own to photograph the agents and get photographed. The meeting was strained but polite, and mostly silent, dominated as it was by the clicking of cameras... the agents packed themselves into their black Mercedes...and sped off for points unknown.

You don't have to be a pedophile, or even sympathetic to NAMBLA concerns, to appreciate the bravery (and the surreal humor) of that tiny group's action. The antagonism was not due solely to police presence, either; a coalition of members from several Philadelphia lesbian and gay organizations had gone so far to disassociate themselves from the man/boy love group as to notify the straight press of their opposition to NAMBLA's use of the city's Gay Community Center.

A Witchhunt Foiled is a story of NAMBLA's constant struggle, not just against sexual taboos, but against the fearful misconceptions of their detractors and the gestapo tactics of the law in suppressing their voices. This should sound familiar to all of us; it's the stuff of Stonewalls and White Nights, of the greater lesbian/gay struggle in which we all participate. The book is worth reading if only to reaffirm that sexual freedom means freedom for every consensual relationship, even those we don't pursue ourselves. If we make sexual/civil liberties conditional, it's easy to forget that all of us, no matter how assimilated we become, still fall into the "sexual minority" category.

The Cabaret Gold Awards

The Eighth Annual Cabaret Gold Awards gala is now history. This four-and-a-half hour show-and-tell marathon, in which local comedians, vocalists and musicians are honored by their peers for outstanding achievement, was produced with considerable Hollywood hoopla by the Council on Entertainment and director Marc Anthony.

Comedian Pat Paulson hosted the event and was remarkably effective in both his scripted and off-the-cuff remarks. He strongly hints that he is about to unleash another run for the Presidency upon an unsuspecting public.

In a change from past years, the show featured performances by all of the contenders prior to intermission so that all nominees would be eligible for intermission voting for Entertainer of the Year. (It is hoped that this questionable innovation will be dumped by next year, since some of the multiple-performer categories obviously do not lend themselves to "entertainer" status. In past years, the audience voted on three nominated performers. This year the vote was splintered between 22 nominees!)

The second half of the program was given over to passing out winners' plaques, not a highly entertaining segment unless you're one of the contenders.

A number of special awards were voted by the Council's board of directors. Ann Jillian received the Local Girl Makes Good Award; the Swig Family and the Fairmont Hotel were awarded the John L. Wasserman Memorial Award; Faye Carol received a Golden Laurel Award as a three-time winner of the Gold Award for jazz artist; and Finocchio's was honored for 50 years as a landmark in the city's night life.

Mrs. Ruth Vitek, mother of the late comedian Don McLean, flew in from Arizona to present her second annual memorial award of $1,000 to comedian Mike Ferrucci, who was selected from a field of five promising comedians by eleven Bay Area comedy club entrepreneurs. (A showcase of the Don McLean Memorial Award contenders was held at The Punch Line on the previous Monday with last year's winner, Jeannine Hansen, lending her comedic talent to the event.)

Other than some initial sound problems (somebody in the booth forgot to flip on the switches), the Gold Awards offered a smoothly run show. Award presentations to the non-performing nominees (clubs, for instance) might have been made in the first half to cover the set-up times of the musical acts.

Two non-nominee dance acts in the second half added considerably to the length of the evening and not necessarily to its artistic betterment. The cast of Finocchio's performed an over-long segment from its current show, and two couples from Dance Through Time performed (to taped accompaniment) a somewhat tame tango and a predictable jitterbug along with some rather sophomoric dialogue.

Female vocalists, as usual, glittered like gold. Val Diamond's "Crying" was top notch mahvelous; glittery and gorgeous Cindy Herron (this year's Miss San Francisco and a first-time Gold nominee) scatted through "All of Me," and our premier cabaret songbird, Weslia Whitfield, enthralled everyone with a superb "Make Someone Happy." Leola Jiles (Gold winner in the jazz/blues category) brought down the house (nothing new to her) with a blistering, innuendo-laced "Dr. Feelgood," that was directly responsible for earning her the coveted Entertainer of the Year Award.

Jae Ross and Eugene Barry Hill were fine in a number from their concert nomination, but other group nominations suffered from sound problems in the cavernous but handsome Gift Center. Michael Feinstein flew in from New York to do a lovely Gershwin medley and to pick up the Visiting National Artist Award. His local counterpart, Peter Mintun, took home the Gold for piano entertainer.

For once, however, comedy reigned at the awards show. Danny Williams, another first-time nominee, made a fine impression with his rapid-fire, slightly berserk routine. Will Durst, laid-back and cerebral, continued to enumerate our President's inadequacies — to resounding applause — and took home the Gold for outstanding male comedian.

But the overwhelming ovation of the night went to Marga Gomez, the Madwoman of Noe Valley, when it was announced she had won the Female Comedy Award. This outrageous stand-up comic deserves national recognition.

Group comedians Murphy/St. Paul and Faultline (the winner), and musical groups Zasu Pitts Memorial Orchestra (the winner) and The Flips fared less well acoustically.

Gold Award winners not mentioned above were Jae Ross — male vocalist; Bob Bauer, musical director of Tune the Grand Up — cabaret-theatre presentation; Jae Ross and Eugene Barry Hill — concert performance. Eight additional awards were presented to various Bay Area clubs

The Lesbian/Gay Chorus of San Francisco

Early last month, the Lesbian/Gay Chorus of San Francisco undertook a noble effort in donating a portion of each ticket to their concert, This is My Country, to the Statue of Liberty Restoration Fund in the name of the local lesbian and gay community. This concert, which was held at the First Unitarian Church, featured music by American composers. The Chorus' nice blend of voices was undone by the mainly uninspired, passionless renditions.

Part of the fault may lie in the arrangements themselves, but musical director Rodger D. Pettyjohn failed dismally to inspire his singers to do their utmost. In the second half of the program, the Chorus' moving performance of a medley of Simon and Garfunkel hits ("The Sounds of Silence," "The 59th Street Bridge Song," and "Bridge Over Troubled Waters") demonstrated what the members were capable of attaining. However, this gem was a mere baguette in the overall performance.

According to the program, soprano Jene Bombardier was being introduced with that evening's performance. (Just why she was being "introduced" was not explained, unless the Chorus is in the habit of giving any new member a solo portion.) Her "Prisoner," "Who Will Buy?" and bluesy "Since I Fell for You" were all pleasantly, if unenthusiastically, rendered. Bombardier was also one of the quartet called Muni Transfer (the other three singers were Chris Manchester, Craig Jordan and Doug Watkins). This group, specializing in tunes from the '30s and '40s, warbled their way through "Java Jive" and "Tuxedo Junction," maintaining a close harmony a capella.

The program also featured spirituals and folk songs delivered in a lackluster fashion. Dwight Okamura provided piano accompaniment. John Chase Crimen showed a large amount of enthusiasm as the sign language interpreter.

Miss Liberty will undoubtedly be grateful for the monetary contribution from the Lesbian/Gay Chorus but would hang her head in shame if she could hear the unenthusiastic performance given in the name of her restoration fund.

The Vocal Minority Goes RPM

"It don't mean a thing if it ain't got that swing" goes the song, and the Vocal Minority assuredly had that in their performance of "The Vocal Minority Goes RPM." Held at the Nova Theatre each Sunday evening in March, this mixed chorus of seven men and seven women, under the musical direction of Bill Ganz, concocted a joyful, bubbling salute to music of the '30s through today.

The composition of the arrangements, coupled with Jae Ross' imaginative stage direction, helped to create a delightful evening's entertainment. The Vocal Minority was backed by Bob Bauer on piano (better known for his cabaret work), Karen Horner on bass and Mark Brandt on drums.

The group's lively "In the Mood" (with a fine solo by Jack Mahan), in which the singers broke into a jitterbug, was complemented later with their dancing during a "Sock Hop Medley." Eve Benton, Beth Bricker and Fran Sehnert's tight harmony did justice to a sensuous "Squeeze Me," during which the three did just that to each other. A lovely a capella "A Nightingale Sang in Berkeley Square" gave a brief respite from the other more rambunctious numbers.

During the Vocal Minority's "New York Medley," "I've Got Rhythm" blended with "Crazy Rhythm," before coming into its own.

Bergren's Back

Lynda Bergren made her first appearance in almost a year last Sunday at the 1177. Cabaret's glamor queen filled the room and turned away another 100 standby reservations. She returns Sunday and Monday, April 13-14 but be forewarned: if you want to catch her, reserve now.

Glittery, silvery, shimmery Lynda pleased her fans with a songbook of 18 mostly new numbers. From "Sesame Street" she sang a delightfully upbeat "Happy," then two of accompanist Bob Bendorff's songs, "A Lit Bit More" (for daughter Lisa) and the show-bizzy "Ode to a Torch."

Lynda has always brought a special touch to songs requiring emotional interpretation, and her treatment of Sondheim's "Not While I'm Around" was a tender and moving moment. "Flying Easy," a so-so Donny Hathaway number, was easily disposed of before she settled into a dramatic reading of Janis Ian's memory-tortured "In the Winter." One of her best. Maltby/Shire's bitchy "I Don't Remember Christmas" was a big crowd pleaser (count me out on this one) and she reprised her big rendition of Jerry Herman's "I Am What I Am" from former concerts.

Her voice seems richer, darker than in past

Two tap dancers (no credit was given in the program) skillfully hoofed through the number. Deb Clifford's harsh upper range marred an otherwise pleasant "S Wonderful."

Michele Rutherford's tortured interpretation of "Heartbreak Hotel" sounded like she had actually stayed there. This was humorously juxtaposed with "Love Me Tender," followed by "Don't Be Cruel."

Clifford, Rutherford and Jill Tallmer joined forces to satirize the Supremes with "Baby Love" and "Stop in the Name of Love," during which "Diana" kept trying to grab the spotlight but was always left in the dark.

The Vocal Minority presented an emotion-laden "The Rose," and their version of "My Corner of the Sky" conjured up new meaning.

Besides sounding first-rate, the chorus also knows how to have fun with its material. During the '50s segment, the men dressed like greasers and the women donned prom dresses (even Mickey Mouse ears and a hula-hoop made appearances). During the "Sock Hop Medley," Wade Gardner sang "Runaround Sue" to an uninterested woman who, when she latched onto another woman, sang "She Runs Around with Other Dykes." Other bits of refreshing irreverence popped up throughout, which would give those who take this music — especially that from the '50s — too seriously, something to think about.

concerts, with a pleasing hint of huskiness for added pizzazz now and then.

Her second set included a Cy Coleman number, "You in the Back Row," from his Broadway-bound show and it's got cabaret hit written all over it. Michele Brouman's "Hold Out for the Real Thing" was not very interesting musically or lyrically although Bendorff managed to work some keyboard magic into it. Amanda McBroom's "Portrait" was another crowd pleaser, whereas I was more charmed by a rousing medley of Irving Berlin tunes that ranged from "Puttin' on the Ritz" to "Let Yourself Go," the bittersweet "What'll I Do?" and "Alexander's Ragtime Band." Her encore, Piaf's "Hymn to Love," brought the house to its feet.

Sharon McNight

Whenever Sharon McNight is in town for a performance, one can always count on a hot evening's entertainment. After playing in Berlin, Holland, New York City and "other foreign countries," McNight recently returned to San Francisco to give her "first official performance as a benefit for me" (McNight has appeared in numerous benefits here and around the country) at the 1177 Club in mid-March.

Bawdy and brash, but with an underlying vulnerability, McNight knows how to work a song to best advantage. She can touch one's soul with "On My Own" from Les Miserables, then deliver a twangy C&W lament, "U-n-c-o-u-p-l-e-d," from Starlight Express, and deftly move to a down-to-earth "I Don't Want to Get Thin." This last number was sung by Sophie Tucker originally. McNight has been working on a one-woman show about her, but "Sophie's on the back burner for now."

McNight comes across at first as a hard woman, but she destroys this image by exposing her hidden vulnerability in "You've Lost that Lovin' Feeling" or by tenderly delivering "Total Eclipse of the Heart."

Pianist/arranger Richard Weinstock's

delightful and thoughtful accompaniments augmented McNight's vocalizing. (Weinstock, who has written scores for Joseph Papp's New York Shakespeare Festival, has composed an original musical, Sboestring Symphony, which is hopefully headed for Broadway.) Weinstock joined McNight in some back-up harmonizing during a few of the numbers. Together they presented an extremely tight show.

McNight's witty patter and repartee moved the show along at a brisk pace. She spoke about her travels, saying she went to Europe to "correct Reagan's mistakes" on a one-on-one basis ("foreign affairs"); there is a club in Berlin, the Chez Nous, where "you need a program to tell who's what"; and that she and Weinstock may be traveling to Russia ("Another alphabet to learn"). She is also working on a new album.

McNight is a combination of Mae West and Sophie Tucker with a splash of Marilyn Monroe thrown in. Add these to McNight's own persona and the combination is truly winning.

Karina Zorn

I've just discovered someone new. She's got a great voice, and for someone so young, she has marvelous taste in songs. Most of everything she sang was pre-1950s, which means she attaches no little importance to literate lyrics.

In fact, the entire evening at the 1177 Club was a throwback to the '50s. The crowd was dressy, the couple next to me drank Manhattans, and — wonder of wonders — the band wore tuxes!

Karina Zorn, all pink sparkles, launched into "Night and Day," and without further chit-chat swung right into "Just One of Those Things." She gave it the slightly slurred, sexy enunciation of Lena Horne with just a whisper of Mabel Mercer's raggedness. Fine effect. One good number followed another: "You Go to My Head," "I'm Glad There is You," "I Can't Get Started" and "Foggy Day." Scott Singer's piano arrangement on the latter was marvelous although the reverb tended to overpower the vocalist.

A totally simple reading of "It Had to be You" with piano back-up was exquisite, and Zorn's fine musicianship was especially evident in "New York State of Mind." Jim Moran on sax framed the lonely, midnight mood beautifully.

More shades of the '50s! Zorn returned for her second set in a black and gold number that looked like the best of Balenciaga. She coasted through another nicely balanced group including the bouncy "I Got a Feeling You're Foolin'," Billy Barnes' "Something Cool," that wartime warhorse "I'll Never Smile Again," a witty presentation of "Married I Can Always Get," a campy, vampy "I Wanna Be Around," and a lovely resurrection of "Delovely."

John Xepolious on drums, Pat Klobas on bass, Jim Moran on sax and flute, and musical director Scott Singer on piano created the elegant sound — occasionally at the expense of the singer — of a romantic dance band.

Karina Zorn returns to the 1177 Club on April 30. This talented, delightful newcomer deserves your respectful attention.

Chuck Solomon...

I mean just forget it! Sometimes you didn't want to have your dinner interrupted. Even though people were really genuine and loved us, they really thought they knew us. It was because the show was so honest. We revealed secrets about ourselves. A major secret.

What major secret did you reveal about yourself on stage, Chuck?

It had to do with butchness and femininity and being rescued. My cousin Susan and I, when we were little kids, used to play dress-up. But I'd only play if I was the princess and she was the prince, and she'd rescue me. It was a pattern for the rest of my life. As an adult I tried to change certain things that were there from the beginning but...

How do you see the future of gay theater?

As administrative director of the Studio at Theatre Rhino and for a spell as acting artistic director, I read many, many new gay plays. I don't see any real shift in what people out there are writing about. Problems of ours have been going on forever. Gay culture may be becoming more accepted in mass media, so there might even come a time far in the future when there won't be the need for gay, Black, Asian or women's theater. However, I think at this point it's very important to have them. There's a need for isolation for awhile, a need to pull back in and decide what the real issues are and how to deal with them. Then we'll be ready to join society to implement the ideas and politics in a way that will make it better for everyone. I've always been an idealist.

You've had so much experience with people close to you dying from AIDS and now you yourself have AIDS. How has this affected you?

It's been easier for me to deal with myself having AIDS than it was with my long-term lover Scott who died, my older brother who died, my boss who died, and my colleagues and friends who have died. About three years ago, I had a year during which it seemed that all the people I knew were dropping like flies. When my brother got sick, and a year later when my lover got sick, I was so devastated that I would go to work and sit there for two hours without moving. I was catatonic. I would break down in tears every 20 minutes. People were certainly wonderful to me, but that was the most difficult year of my life. It was constant grief; there was never a letup.

UNEASY LISTENING

BY BARRY BYFORD

Chris and Cosy:

Techno-primativ, LP, Rough Trade.

This is their "Mingus" album. Techno-drivel. Songs to sing your robot to sleep with. Like I always say, "Do anything to me but don't bore me!"

Stan Ridgway:

The Big Heat, LP, I.R.S.

The three songs from the last single are here, and they are the most exciting thing on the album. With the exception of "Pick it Up" the material is weak and predictable, which is the last thing we have come to expect from the father of Wall of Voodoo. It's not a bad album, it's just not up to what the single led us to believe was in store. Has the breakup of a class A group resulted in two class B acts? Only time will tell.

Depeche Mode:

Stripped, 25 minute single, Mute.

What a nice cover for boring remixes of previously released songs and some dull-witted new stuff. One's disappointment is proportionate to one's expectations. Write that down for future reference.

Monkey Rhythm:

This Must Be the Place, 12", 415.

Described as Orinda dissidents, these guys have great potential. I don't find much dissidence in the music, but one probably doesn't have to do much in Orinda to be considered dissident. What I do hear is elements from so many styles that this music will be accessible to many. Worth a listen.

The Cramps:

A Date with Elvis, LP, Big Beat.

The Cramps are finally following up on that line from one of their early songs, "You looked just like an Elvis from Hell!" The titles read like a porno book and the music is in The Cramps' style of cajun Elvis. It's great: humorous and yet disciplined and expert. I gotta give you some titles: "Kizmiat," "Cornfed Dames," "Hot Pearl Snatch," "Can Your Pussy Do the Dog," "People Ain't No Good," and "Aloha From Hell." Lovely. The cover features what can only be Wendy O. Williams' sister fresh from her date. Keen. Nifty.

Desert Hearts

Reviewed by Anne Hietbrink

Desert Hearts is a movie you might need permission to see. If your cinematic fantasy is to "get the girl" that the leading man has so often swept off her feet, Desert Hearts lets you have her. How often do you get to go to the movies and see one attractive woman fall madly in love with another woman, have dramatic passionate moments, even sex, and then watch one of them (sob) ride unavoidably off into the sunset? This is a major event, girls. Watch out.

Taken largely from Jane Rule's 1964 novel Desert of the Heart, Desert Hearts is set in Reno in 1959. Vivian (Helen Shaver), an uptight professor of English literature from Columbia University, has come to Nevada for a quickie divorce. She moves into a women's boarding house/ranch for her six-week stay. At the ranch, Vivian meets Cay (Patricia Charbonneau), a Reno native who works in one of the local casinos. Therein lies the romance. More on that later.

One of the most redeeming qualities of Desert Hearts is the fact that all of the principal characters are women. That is not to say that the movie sets out to "represent" women or make any kind of statement about women. The story just "happens" with women. The ease with which the story happens, as though it were like any other feature film you might have chosen to see, is a credit to Donna Deitch's direction. She manages to give us women, lesbian and not, playing only themselves and not assuming anything about the lives of the rest of us.

Cay lives at the ranch because her father lived for many years with Frances (Audra Lindley), the ranch's proprietor. Frances is fond of Cay like a daughter she never had, and is threatened by the affection growing between Vivian and Cay. Frances finally throws Vivian out of the ranch — thank goodness — and sends her to a hotel.

Thank goodness...because without Frances, Cay and Vivian might still be making eyes at each other.

There is also Cay's friend from the casino, Silver (Andra Akers), who is about to get married. Silver and Cay have been friends and perhaps lovers. In fact, they have their longest screen conversation while sitting together in Silver's bathtub. Silver watches the courtship between Vivian and Cay with great interest.

Even in its shaky moments, the film is carried by the strength of these four women as actors. Shaver as Vivian and Charbonneau as Cay are delightful to watch. Charbonneau is surprisingly adept as a brazen, late 1950s, Nevada-style Amazon. Shaver, as the older but less experienced Vivian, delivers lines like "I don't have a point of reference for this" with a naturalness that borders on comedy. (She says the above in the midst of Cay's seduction of her.) Audra Lindley as Frances couldn't be cast more perfectly. Lindley plays all the hard and softness that Frances is as a loveable and generous woman who is desperately afraid of changes in her life.

There are some minor men. The most likeable is Walter (Alex McArthur), who is fond and supportive of Cay and eventually befriends Vivian as well. In one of the first scenes between Cay and Vivian, Vivian stops with some mail for Cay at her cottage house. Walter is a step away, pitching hay or some other ranchlike activity. Cay invites Vivian in, though it becomes evident to all of them that Cay has another woman there in her bed. Walter calls out goodnaturedly to Cay, "How you get all that traffic with no equipment is beyond me." Cay smiles. Vivian, who is just barely off the train from New York, is taking in so much new information that she hardly seems to notice.

I didn't expect to, but I laughed. The script has numerous funny lines and strong dialogue throughout. Natalie Cooper (an Oakland resident) who wrote the screenplay, has simplified the more complex relationships in Rule's book to fit into an hour and forty minutes of movie time. Like any book-made-into-movie, there are inevitable moments or characters that are missing or different. For example: It is a completely irrational complaint, but I was disappointed that Cooper had changed characters' names from the book: Cay was Ann, Vivian was Evelyn, etc. Nonetheless, Cooper's adaptation is definitely one of the strengths of Desert Hearts.

There are minor technical problems. The film is jumpy in the first 20-30 minutes. Cuts from scene to scene are a bit jarring and there is at least one moment when the soundtrack did not match up with the frame. Many of these weaknesses clear up in later parts of the film. So there is good dialogue along with good music and great cars. I only wish I could say there is good sex. Desert Hearts is, after all, a lesbian-created film and its major selling point is the promise of explicit lesbian sex.

Desert Hearts is what it promises: a lesbian romance with sex, too. The problem is that the sex scenes aren't especially imaginative, and they come all together in a breathtaking (as in wind knocked out of you) chunk. The intimate meeting between Cay and Vivian that is so painstakingly prepared for ends up not working because what we see is the anatomy of women making love, not the passion. It starts with an endless kiss (not particularly passionate, but complete with a long string of drool between the two women's lips), and several breast, neck and thigh studies later, we finally have an orgasm. But then, even the anatomy is questionable. Considering the lovers' positions vis-a-vis each other, the orgasm seemed to be very nearly impossible. I was relieved to see them with clothes on again.

And so it goes with love affairs. There is always relief in returning to the ordinariness and predictability of routines after the affair is over, wistful longing notwithstanding. Desert Hearts is the story of an affair, not a Relationship. Vivian returns to New York City and her career. Cay probably stays in Reno, charming women and men around her with her extremely attractive butch demeanor.

I don't give Desert Hearts my best movie of the year award, but I am sending everyone I know to see it. Seeing it has made me newly curious about the women around me. I see Cays and Vivians everywhere, and possibilities I might not have imagined before. Cay and Vivian are in another time and place. They don't look like the women I know. But I like them both, a lot. I am looking for them now, in my dreams, at the bus stop, stuck with me in an elevator somewhere.... In fact, I've decided that the desert would be a great place for my next vacation, as soon as I can get there.

Parting Glances

Reviewed by Mario Mondelli

In Bill Sherwood's new independent film Parting Glances, Manhattan is shown for the first time as the new "melting pot" it has become. The casting in one party scene might have been done half at the U.N., half at Masters and Johnson. Straight whites are the minority in Sherwood's New York; they're generally twerps who exist to serve as foils for the movie's humor and rage. A European married couple, Soho gallery honchos, are made pretentious and absurd, the husband repulsively so: "That man reeks of death," he says, watching a gay man with AIDS. "I am fascinated by that man's penis. It can give life; it can give death...I would like to put on a show featuring only men who are terminally ill." (Later, when the PWA threatens to slit the European's throat in a dark hallway, his fascination with death becomes far less acute.) Elsewhere, a gay man is entertained by a straight woman's lascivious reminiscences of a past sexual encounter with two gay men (she uses the archaic "you know" to describe them: "Everyone knew they were both...you know."), while in the next room, his lover is amusingly evading the advances of her boyfriend. This repeated message in Parting Glances affirms the common gay knowledge that not only are straights as neurotic and sleazy and promiscuous as gays are made out to be, they're frequently more so. It's exhilarating to see the tables turned this way.

Straight-made films have primarily shown gay characters (when they bother to acknowledge gays' existence) living in quiet, self-loathing desperation. Their sexuality almost always brings them and their loved ones misery, often ending in death (the TV-movie An Early Frost leaps to mind). Parting Glances indulges in none of this fiction. Its gays aren't neurotic because they're gay, but because they're queers living in Manhattan in 1986 — reason enough for neurosis by any standards.

Michael (Richard Ganoung) is a 28-year-old freelance editor who lives in Manhattan with his lover, Robert. Though Sherwood and the actors try to establish the relationship through impetuous, "nutty" romance scenes, the interplay in these scenes goes flat; it's acting school zaniness. You don't believe these guys love each other — or even know each other. The actors in Making Love were more comfortable with sex than this. Michael shies away from the physical advances of his handsome partner, flinching as if they're painful (though he gives in as soon as Robert plays topman — it's like a courtship dance). John Bolger's Robert looks like a GQ model being forced to smile; his flushed stammer when Michael fondles his crotch under the table at a dinner party is one of the few moments he comes alive — the more subtle motivations slip by him. When Michael's ex-lover, Nick, calls Robert "a Ken doll," it's a perfect metaphor. Bolger is quite aware that he's no slouch in the looks department, too; he's a major contender for the 1986 Richard Gere "Most Shirtless Scenes in a Single Film" award.

Without Steven Buscemi's rubber-faced, techno-maniac performance as Nick, Parting Glances might have been an exercise in anhedonia — the inability to experience pleasure. Nick, a rock singer with AIDS (his pale skin seems to be turning transparent), is no "victim"; his East Coast energy and smart-ass humor keep his deterioration from becoming saccharine or maudlin. Michael's visits with Nick (to feed him organic muck while prattling optimistically about a cure) are the only times Ganoung's Michael shows a little spark. Buscemi, and to some degree director/screenwriter Sherwood, give the picture enough hyperactive intensity to keep us hooked. Nick's scenes leap out from the rest; they're touched by genius. He's such a break from the moody twosome that you want to applaud when he appears.

In all fairness, though, Nick is a choice role — the script gives him a mile-long headstart. Parting Glances' spotty story is full of holes, and Sherwood inadvertently emphasizes incidents that have little bearing on his story. Nick hallucinates; he and an armor-clad ghost of a dead friend exchange chummy riffs about the hereafter, recalling similar scenes in An American Werewolf in London. But the appearances are superfluous and oddly placed;

they seem to be cut from another movie. Elsewhere in the film, a number of characters make bogus excuses for not going to see Nick; it's plain that they simply don't want to see the effects up close. Yet when Nick shows up uninvited at Robert's going-away party, the same people exhibit no hint of discomfort, whether stifled or outright. When a (female) ex-lover of Robert's whisks him away from the party for an auld lang syne lay on the roof, Michael surreptitiously spies on the scene, overhearing his sloshed lover confess that all of his relationships have seemed like attempts to recapture the feeling of his first, with her. Michael later tells Nick that their affair, his first, is the only one that he holds dear. This romantic's view of relationships is shaky at best, but we suspend our cynicism when the film takes it to heart; and when the ending explodes this idea, it feels like a cheat.

When the final credits roll, the major characters' lives are little different than when we came in; none of them really takes off for anywhere or breaks up or evolves any new insights. Everyone just gets a little older, but not much wiser, and the action lurches to a halt, so abruptly that you wonder if that's where the budget ran out. The movie seems to have entered the scene for the wrong 24 hours — too early for Nick's death, too late to understand what keeps Robert and Michael together. (Inertia?)

There are more than a few firsts in Parting Glances, and when acting, direction and script jell, its perceptions ring true. Sherwood should be credited for avoiding every one of the pitfalls that would have Parting Glances being referred to as "that new AIDS movie." Without resorting to chintzy sentimentality, it presents filmdom with its first PWA. It's to our advantage that the filmmakers didn't choose to saddle him with metaphor. Neither hero nor victim, Nick is one of the first gay human beings ever put on film.

Parade Co-Chairs...

this year we're going to try to top that. There's going to be a limited number of quality speakers, about four or five people who can address every issue that actually affects us as lesbians and gays —

[Courtney:] — and bisexuals —

[Toner:] — and bisexuals — how could I forget that? We're spreading the speakers out over the day, so out of six hours of entertainment, we're having thirty, maybe forty minutes of speaking, and that's it.

Are you going to bring in any international figures this year?

[Toner:] We're very gung-ho on trying to test the immigration suit. There's a number of people of international prominence that are expressing an interest in coming to San Francisco this June, but nothing is definite yet.

[Courtney:] There's a couple of philosophical changes that I'd like to talk about. One of our subcommittees used to be called "Beer;" now we're calling it "Beverages." There's a lot of concern in the lesbian/gay community about reducing alcohol consumption and taking a look at our health — the largest marching contingent in the Parade is Living Sober. So right next to every beer booth will be a soda-booth.

We're also changing "Medical" to "Health;" because we're promoting people's health during the event. And "Disability Outreach" is now going to be called "Special Needs." We want to make the Parade and celebration completely accessible to people with hearing, visual and mobility impairment; people with AIDS, ARC, life-threatening or debilitating illnesses; pregnant women; fat people; people who are allergic to smoke or scents. We're providing chairs, shade, water, food, a lot of things to make special areas accessible.

[Toner:] I feel like this is going to be one of the best parades ever. And not getting on our own egos really, but there's a hell of a lot going on out there. In San Francisco, we more or less have it pretty easy. But we still need to look at what's going on in the rest of the country. A lot of people say, "Well, who gives a shit about what goes on in the rest of the country? This is San Francisco and this is San Francisco's parade." But it's not, because we do have a track record of concern for the rest of the world.

[Courtney:] One thing that we're real aware of, is that as gays, lesbians and bisexuals, we are still the only minority that's legally discriminated against,

And popularly...

[Courtney:] Yes, and popularly discriminated against, and that hurts. You know, the media comes from all over the world to cover this event. And we have a responsibility to the rest of the world, because they hear.

Do you both see yourself staying with the Parade after this?

[Toner:] I don't know. I have no idea whether I'll be co-chair again or not, but I'll definitely be a board member and involved in the planning and production of the Parade and celebration.

Any other political aspirations?

[Toner:] I don't know

[Courtney:] Yes.

What are you thinking of?

[Courtney:] I really want to make human rights my life. I don't want to do retail management anymore.

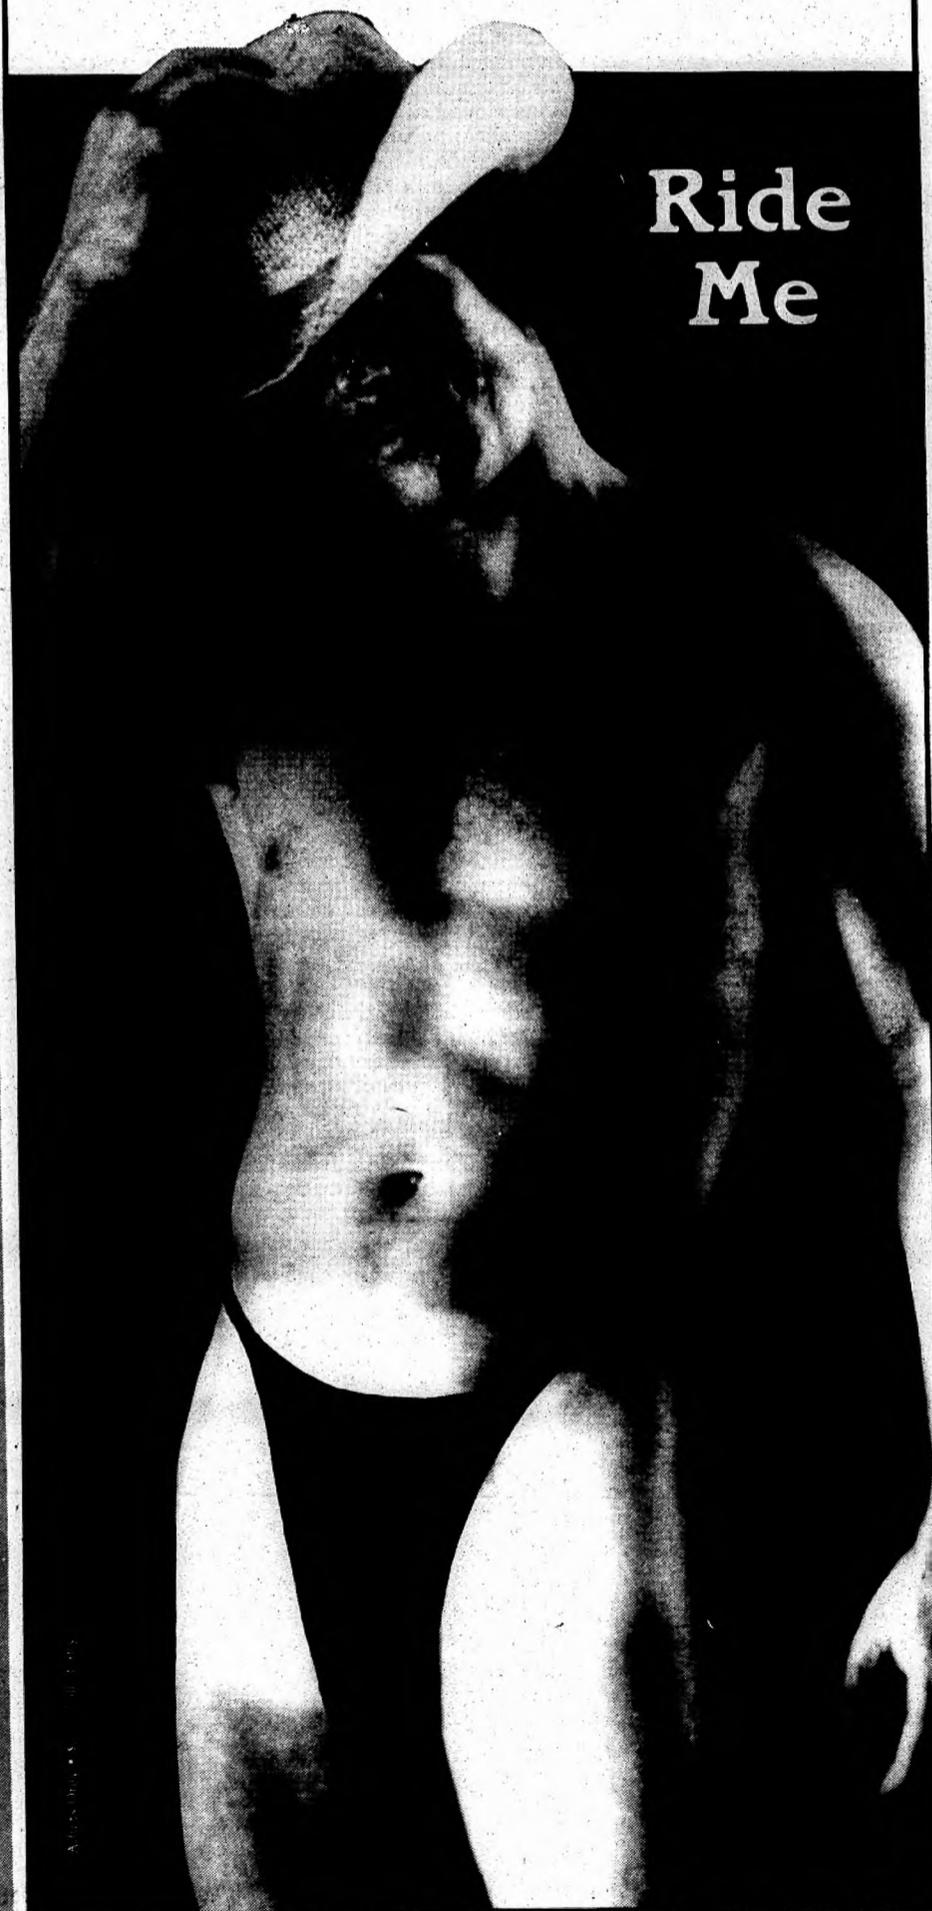

[Toner:] (he puts his arm around Courtney) We want to be professional homosexuals (everyone laughs, then there's a long pause.) Or ... professional bisexuals.

[Courtney:] Yes!

The American Ballet Theatre

Reviewed by Randy Krivonic

The old cliché goes: You can fool some of the people all of the time, and all of the people some of the time, but you can't fool all of the people all of the time. Well, time has finally caught up with Mssr. Mikhail Baryshnikov — that elfin composite of Rambo, Beaver Cleaver, Jimmy Cagney and Luke Skywalker in ballet tights. After Misha's sellout of his personal image to Hollywood — most recently in the propaganda potboiler White Nights — the effect would surely trickle down to that minor ensemble, the American Ballet Theatre (which he is rumored to direct in some fashion), and it has — with a thud — as became clear during their February 24-March 2 visit to San Francisco.

It's hard to describe where to begin with the company's troubles; repertoire, dancers, management policies, conservation of the company's important choreographic heritage, and serious financial imbalances. Casual observation of ABT's roster has percolated with missing names since the inception of Baryshnikov's reign. A more careful study reveals an exodus of ABT's major talents, causing promotion of inadequate, immature soloists and principals. Among the missing: Fernando Bujones, Magali Messac, Natalia Makarova, Alexander Godunov, Robert La Fosse, Yoko Ichino, Gelsey Kirkland, Lise Houlton, Ronald Perry, Elaine Kudo and many others. Some of these are among the world's finest artists, the rest are superlative enough to have been the backbone of ABT's glory years. What was once the crown jewel of Western Ballet is now a hackneyed, amateurish organism that limps through performances in search of direction and aesthetic meaning.

Change is certainly in the wind (Kenneth MacMillan and John Taras have been brought in to do much of the nuts and bolts of company management while Misha prances through Hollywood), but not, it seems, in time to prevent a permanent scar from mauling ABT's future. The dance world's highly respected publication, Ballet News, recently printed an editorial which did the unheard of — attacking the Baryshnikov regime with an honest analysis of its current disastrous condition. Critics across the country savaged last year's ultra-expensive "Cinderella" — which proved to be the terpsichorean equivalent of movie mega-bomb Heaven's Gate — a plodding, inept bore that cost and lost millions. Classical mainstays like "Swan Lake," "Giselle," "Sleeping Beauty," "Raymonda," "La Bayadere"; ABT's in-house masterpieces like "Fall River Legend" and "Pillar of Fire"; and the brilliant choreography of Glen Tetley, have been absent entirely or altered to abrupt, sloppy mini-versions. These works are precious beyond the joys we receive as an audience — they are the bones upon which dancers cut their teeth and learn greatness. They are rich in narrative artistry (i.e., characterization and acting), breeding grounds for sublime dance-actors like Alicia Alonso, Nora Kaye and Lupe Serrano, stars who shone in an earlier generation under the eagle eye of ABT's late director emeritus, Lucia Chase. Young ABT dancers are no longer given these roles to challenge their dramatic skills and as a result, they often perform with the brittle mechanical style of computer-animated graphics.

There are famous old stories of the Russian prima ballerina from the Diaghilev era, Olga Spessitzeva, who actually went mad during the mad scene in "Giselle." She was so enrapt in character that she believed she was Giselle — and in her trance was committed to Bellevue Hospital, where she remained for many decades. We may smile at the antique charm of such a story, but Spessitzeva was a heavy lady — the kind of dancer who justifies the artifice of ballet, who inhabits a role with magic and conviction, who digs from the soul for emotional profundity as well as technical excellence and elegance of line. Good luck finding such a dancer in Baryshnikov's ranks!

ABT's best divae, Cynthia Gregory and Martine van Hamel, are at their pinnacle, still radiant and commanding, but leaving room for new kids to rise. And what a mediocre crop. Except for Deidre Carberry — who is a cunning little soubrette, bursting with natural comedic flair — the rest are a pack of competent, expressionless dancers with the appeal of day-old tapioca pudding: Susan Jaffe, Cynthia Harvey, Cheryl Yeager, Amanda McKerrow and Bonnie Moore.

Opening night of ABT's San Francisco visit brought the unexpected — "Giselle." After an absence of several years, this was the most welcome ballet on their tour, but proved hardly a correct recipe for opening night. One of the earliest ballets extant, "Giselle" is choreographically austere and uncluttered (even in a severely butchered production such as this one — credited to more choreographers in the program than have ever been listed for one ballet); its dramatic subtleties can prove stifling for a first night audience eager for showy, athletic stuff.

This version's Act I had us thinking the ABT initials stood for American Ballet Tedium. After heavy pre-publicity, Alessandra Ferri's debut in the title role began to look like a bigger dud than New Coke. Unconvincing, small-scale mime between Ferri and the goofy, Disneyesque Albrecht of Baryshnikov, led into some tentative footwork during Giselle's rather simple opening solos. A new peasant pas de quatre (where do those peasants find time to rehearse?) attempted to take off, but sputtered aimlessly — despite a valiant effort by the prodigiously gifted Johann Renvall. Ferri's mad scene was a yawner. In fact, this Act I was so low key that the sparse applause it received seemed more apologetic than appreciative. Commenting on the somber mood, a sharp-toothed friend observed during intermission, "Well, you know they're OVER ABT in New York."

I was prepared for the worst when Act II began. Disastrously. Cheap special effects were waved from the wings in place of real Willis — crude effects that would have made Spielberg and Alwin Nikolais cringe. Willis are to "Giselle" what the Three Bears are to Goldilocks — indispensable. And here they were replaced by C-size batteries! But then a miracle occurred. Slowly, deliberately, assuredly, a figure boared, back to the audience, from one side of the stage to the other. A sudden bolt of electricity shot through the audience. This was Myrta, queen of the Willis. And not just any Myrta, but the galvanizing, imperious Martine van Hamel. In two short variations, we were witnessing the mysterious bouquet of van Hamel's considerable technique, presence and amplitude. Baryshnikov re-emerged with the vitality missing in Act I — we could sense his energy charging up. Magic was suddenly on the Opera House stage. And then Ferri, the physical incarnation of Giselle, floated from her misty grave in a gossamer ether. The Act II variations and pas de deux displayed Ferri's keen musicality and understanding of romantic port de bras. While there wasn't a sense of true love with this couple (something Baryshnikov achieved only with Gelsey Kirkland), there was an icy perfection in their partnership — something actually quite beautiful to behold. And van Hamel's carriage, even when standing still, commanded rapturous attention with her arched back and supreme phrasing. The Willis corps danced in bizarre formations and receded, thankfully, into the background.

The fog was saved for John Tara's new production of "Francesca da Rimini." It attempted a narrative sweep that swept everything into a tornado of irrelevance. Dancers flew about the stage haphazardly in costumes left over from "Holiday on Ice." Cynthia Gregory was utterly wasted in tacky, clichéd noodling (when America's greatest ballerina doesn't bust the Richter scale during her curtain call ovation, the ballet must stinkeroo). "Francesca" wandered around for about 25 minutes; then, at last, it was over. The loudest ovation for the evening went to Martine van Hamel and Kevin McKenzie in the "Sleeping Beauty" pas de deux.

Watching van Hamel, I began to compare ballerinas to stoves and microwave ovens. Van Hamel is a stove that has cooked lots of wonderful, savory dinners over the years by natural gas — a delicious atmosphere of ambrosial spices hovers in its creative and loving core. Cynthia Harvey, who danced at the gala in Balanchine's "Theme and Variations," is like a microwave oven — sleek, quick-cooking, technically efficient: no muss, no fuss and there you have it. But under the glass and chrome, the food isn't uniformly done and retains a slightly plastic flavor. Martine van Hamel was ABT's dewiest Aurora in the full length of "Beauty" nearly a decade ago, and now has reached a ripeness of flowing sensuality that brings the blood to boil and tears to the eyes. She's often been called the "dancer's dancer," and now that her technique is softening (not diminishing), she is both refined elegance and smoldering passion at their prime. Van Hamel is the ideal Petipa dancer, an interpreter of the rarest aesthetic integrity. She has been the company's most dependable ballerina, a Yoda-like force of inspiration to choreographers, her peers, younger dancers and audiences whom, finally, cheer her to the walls. There is hope for ABT's future as long as van Hamel and Gregory remain in the fold.

For a few splendid moments during American Ballet Theatre's two week visit to San Francisco, we saw a sliver of what ballet is all about. And that Real Thing — like old Coke — is a consummation devoutly to be wished for. The final impression left by ABT is that of a company handcuffed by decadent leadership. The major ABT works of Tudor, de Mille, Tetley, Ailey, etc., have been abandoned along with the signature full-length classics. America deserves a great classical ballet company. ABT, unfortunately, has lost that status.

Chuck Solomon...

Grief is the hardest emotion to deal with. We put a memorial bench in the Arboretum for my lover Scott, and I tried going there this morning, but I still can't go in.

For me, having AIDS is actually easier than seeing my friends die. I wasn't surprised when I was finally diagnosed last October. I felt myself getting steadily weaker and thinner. As soon as I got diagnosed, I started to look better, I started to feel better, I started to rest more, I started to eat more, even when I couldn't. The stress of worrying when I was going to have AIDS was gone, and I just had it. That was all. I feel like I've come to terms with dying, the possibility of dying sooner than I had hoped or expected. But I'm pretty strong. I think. The hardest thing for me has been the transition of going from being a very independent person to someone who now has to depend more on people. This is both a good thing and a bad thing.

AIDS has really changed my relationships with people. Two days after I was diagnosed, I flew to my mother's house in Chicago. It was her birthday. The whole family was gathered at some restaurant or other. They were all thrilled to see me; I was thrilled to see them.

We celebrated my mother's birthday, and the next morning I said, "It's time for a serious talk." And she said, "Oh my God, no!" So I think she was expecting it.

I wanted to tell my whole family. My mother didn't want me to. She didn't want people's pity, she said. I kept on telling her she'd get their love and support and strength. And finally, she agreed. My family has been wonderful. There were twenty of them who flew out to my birthday party from all over the States. They were all brilliant. Their responses were spectacular — calls, cards, presents, total understanding without a shred of fear, loathing, panic, or any of that. They told me I would never have to worry as long as I lived, they'd be there for me.

My friends are the same way. In fact, now that I've been having seizures and I'm not able to drive my own car, I have a friend who has volunteered to be my ride coordinator. She organizes rides for me whenever I have to go anywhere. My friends are so very wonderful. That's what makes it easier for me to be positive. This has shown me more love and support than I ever imagined in my whole life.

How have your views of death changed with all the experience of death around you?

I'm not afraid of it. I've experienced it with so many people, so radically, with people who were so close to me. I'm not afraid of my own. I just worked on two plays about it. I don't mind facing it. I don't have clearcut ideas about after-death. I have more of a tendency to believe people who have had near-death experiences; people who claim to have felt the Light. You know, we'll be going into the Light, those of us who are full of love. I don't know if that's a belief to make it easier for me, but I believe it.

Marc Huestis and Wendy Dallas, who did Whatever Happened to Susan Jane? and Rob Epstein, who directed The Times of Harvey Milk have been working with their crew on a video-documentary about you. What value do you think this film might have?

Well, I think it will show that the more you love people unselfishly and really treat them as if you were they, the more everyone gets it back. It's a matter of respect, or not being entirely self-involved, of not being petty and hateful. This is not the time for that. My friends give me courage; they make me feel strong. It makes me proud to be alive.

Tired of Waiting

The time is right and I'm least expecting it, so where are you? Looking for spiritual partner but hot sex OK. I value spiritual awareness, honesty, humor, depth of feeling, openness and compassion toward all of who we are. I'm playful, intense, irreverent, enjoy outdoors and like to gently play my edges. If you're 30-45, not into drugs or heavy alcohol and can identify with any of the above, please respond. Reply CUI Box AP7.

A Dancing Fool

Who's that? Someone who... expresses more sexual energy on the dance floor than in bed, has definition of the brain as well as the bicep, gets high off chocolate, de-caf coffee and tofu burgers, has a subscription to Vogue but shops at flea markets, meditates on spiritual harmony and materialistic bliss. That's me! Who's you? Send letter and photo. Reply Boxholder, POB 5802, Berkeley 94705.

What are the Words to attract that alluring, attractive woman over 37 to answer an alluring ad such as this? That woman is also particular, sensitive, feminine, affectionate, caring and perhaps new to ads. She hopefully isn't so traveled in the gay sense as she is seeking a companion/lover for quality time closeness. If that is you, we should talk. Reply CUI Box AP8.

Shyly Assertive?

Do you dream, but others see your practicality? Are both your feet on the ground and your head in the clouds? Are you a cynical romantic? Like Bach and rock? Serious but silly? Secretly sensual? Is your life interwoven with contradictions? You're happy...mostly? Me too. I'm mid-30s, intelligent, large, blond/blue, non-smoking. You're independent, communicative, attractive, moderate drinking, non-smoker who's unsure of what you want from a relationship right now, but you know you want something, and are ready to begin exploring. Reply CUI Box AP9.

Versatile Butch Wanted

Attractive, voluptuous Blk femme, 37, prof., fin. stable, parent, seeking butch, fin. stable, over 30, 5'6" + who knows she's a woman and likes it, but who enjoys using a dildo w/harness. I like saunas and hot sex, hot tubs, hot sex, camping, hot sex, dancing, hot sex, etc., etc. Must be healthy, not addicted, smokers OK. Open to all races. Reply CUI Box AP10.

I Want

to find some good women to be with. I consider friendship as important as love and I am interested in both. I'm a 31 year old lesbian, blue eyed and brown haired. I like music, movies, talking with friends, beaches all year round, laughter. I'm a warm and supportive friend and to the right woman very passionate and giving of my heart. Take a chance! Reply CUI Box AP11.

Pseudo-Philosopher

Artist, film critic, couch potato, jock, intellectual, politician, comic, mechanic (OK, maybe not mechanic). Likes, coffee, Bloom County, jazz, spicy food, David Letterman, films, beaches, working out, cats, rock n' roll, motorcycles, tennis, Monty Python, editorials, sushi, Doonesbury and much, much more. At present I'm looking for friends with similar or not so similar interests. So let's get together for a non-threatening cup of coffee with no unreasonable expectations. All replies with phone numbers answered. Reply CUI Box AP12.

Accentuate the Positive

Fun, exciting, alive woman seeks counterpart for lifelong romantic adventure. I'm genuine, sensitive, together, attractive, athletic (jogger, aerobics), non-smoking, 40s. I love to grow, touch, make love, dance, spoil you, be spoiled, wear lace or Levis. You're caring, non-judgmental, tender, somewhat butch, bright, trim. We laugh, play and enjoy film, theater, art, books, the outdoors, fitness, romance, creating the wonderful and living life fully. Reply CUI Box AP18.

Two-Tone

Two swell dyke pals (average age 32) seek dancing partners for double dates. Wit, humor, a sense of the outrageous & "undercover" intelligence essential. No heavy drug/alcohol users please. Would you hock your labrys for a pair of black n' white wing tips? If so, reply CUI Box AP17.

Beyond Friends

Are you 30-40, love life and ready to work on a lasting relationship? I'm a GWF, 32 y.o. with brown hair and eyes. Do you enjoy walks along the beach listening to the crashing waves and barking sea lions or walks in the redwoods? How about an afternoon in a country cafe or even a weekend out of the city? I am looking for a confident and together woman ready to embark on an adventure. I enjoy spontaneity, quiet times, romantic dinners, lazy Sundays, cuddling in front of a fire, camping, photography, good conversation and.... This city lesbian with a touch of country would like to meet you. Shed that winter overcoat and let's have fun in the sun. Reply CUI Box AP16.

Let's Play

Not highly experienced lesbian top wants lesbian only bottoms for steamy kinky playtimes and to explore and grow with. What I want is what I get! If the above is a turn-on to you, then write. New Year's Eve — Peg's Place Your Truck was Towed:

where are you? Who are you? I'm returning to the Bay Area and would enjoy seeing you again. I'll be at Peg's on April 4th, 5th, 11th at 10pm or you could drop me a line via the CUI Box. My intentions are honorable! Dimples and shiny shoes. Reply CUI Box AP14.

A Typical Woman Calling Same

Goodlooking, assertive woman seeks GWF age 38-50. An intelligent, deep and independent woman. One who has stood alone and made friends with herself. I am most of the above. Also, sensual, gentle and volatile at times. Never dull. This friend will enjoy long walks in the woods and by the ocean, reading poetry, long and deep conversations, dancing and quiet times. If the chemistry blends, weekends away and hours of making love. A respect for differences and gentleness are of utmost priority. Let's start by admiring the Brodiaea and Fiddlenecks. Light drinkers OK. Groupies, drug users or smokers need not respond. Reply CUI Box AP19.

Take a Chance

Looking for an honest, intelligent, active individual who enjoys life and is not afraid to show it, is confident enough to laugh at herself or stand her ground. I am 29 yrs old, blond and blue eyed; am professional, feminine, ready for any adventure and a Scorpio. I love traveling, camping, cycling, movie-going with post-discussions, ethnic restaurants and quiet romantic nights at home. I dislike TV, negativism, junk foods, watching football or playing mind games. Interested? Reply CUI Box AP20.

Where Are You?

I am just over 30 and I am looking for a lesbian woman to date — someone who is serious yet sensitive, professional and fun. My work is in the arts and administration. I am a painter as well as fundraiser. I would like to meet someone on the monogamous and tender side who would like to go to the theater, movies — whatever. Reply with photo(?) to CUI Box AP21.

MEN

"...And the Romantic Chemistry Energized their Lives..."

We are both finally at the point where we're ready for that very special, multi-dimensional partnership. We are both independent, insightful, intense, driven towards commitment, sincere, playful, nurturing, optimistic (we can help one another maintain on that one) and bright sensualists. We enjoy long solitary nature walks & talks, live jazz, restaurants, theater, touching and possibly erotic wrestling (which I've never done, but my imagination has been sparked recently). We are healthy — no smoking, drinking or drugs and enjoy a wide variety of friends. I am a published writer and illustrator, creative, 31 yr old, 5'11", 153 lbs BM and have been referred to as "handsome," with an "attractive smile" and "good legs." There is no need for you to feel lonely as a single man, or within an existing unfulfilling relationship. Let's exchange photos and phone numbers. Let's experience the adventure — together. Reply CUI Box AP119.

Soaring Eagle Seeks Same

Honestly, Buckaroo, I aspire to and feel deserving of kinship/palship with an admirable, vivid man like myself. Admirable as in character, physique, countenance. Vivid as in enthusiasm, thoughts, sparkle. This ad aims for resonant feelings and times. Nearly chiseled fitness, mindful peaceful messages are prerequisite; drugs, smoking are unacceptable. I'm 41, tall, sunny, well-built, lean, easy to smile, confident; my passions include vegetables, exercise, landscape, Swedish men, downhill skiing and fonts. If this ad strikes your balance, then be inspired and answer me with a breezy, modulated yet also prismatic reply. Why try? Because answering might be the groundwork for practical gusto, for valued rapport. Reply CUI Box AP50.

Class Act

Fun, tender, bright, attractive GWM, 36, lonely in East Bay, into bicycling, hiking, cooking, cards, mah jong and other indoor sports seeks interesting, diverse companion to share daily experiences, joys and sorrows. Like trim, active, stable, mature non-smoker, light alcohol with lots of personality, energy and a positive attitude. My two small children are an important part of my life several days a week. Reply CUI Box AP51.

Dare to be Unique

Attractive, yuppie, straight appearing Japanese. Am 43 (look minus ten years), coll. grad., stable professional who looks good in business suits as well as in jogging shorts. Seeks GWM, approx. age 35-45, masculine business types who are not into opera, cross dressing, the Castro, etc., but who enjoy outdoor sports, camping, quiet walks along shorelines and quality PBS programs. I am somewhat conservative with Mormon religious background. Previously dated women until recent past. I am coming to grips with my gay sexual identity, and I am willing to safely explore those areas with the right person. I'm caring, sensitive, straightforward and I would like a buddy to share good and difficult times for mutual support. I am a non-smoker, infrequent visitor to Sutter's Mill to embellish local scenery there. Your photo (returnable) will receive mine. Looking forward to hearing from you. Reply CUI Box AP52.

No Frits Man

I am a very handsome man with a very attractive mind who believes there are similar men who shy away from bars and cruising. I am into heavy workouts for both my mind and body and stick to my goals. If you are a man who likes the basics and is down to earth, drop me a line and photo — I will reply with same. I enjoy playing hard (sweat and muscle) and am not interested in the L.A. mentality type. My basics are: GWM, 32, 6'3", 185 lbs and tan. This is a first for me — give it a try. Reply CUI Box AP53.

Ape Angel Wanted

by beautiful Bearded 30 y/o with strong, slender, semi-smooth average build. Come bicycle, baptize and boogie through those Galactic Golden Gates... Let's awaken deep mysteries sleeping in our souls and discover Inner Islands together with poems, playfulness, hugs and heartbeats and maybe we'll blow out the candles together for tonight. Sorry, smokers, beer guzzlers, bigots and television zombies must wait for another flight. Photos returned. Reply CUI Box AP54.

I'm just learning to be open, share and communicate with others on a deep level. It's surprising what can happen and how love can flow. I'm a goodlooking GWM, 39, blond, blue eyes, mustache, 6'2", 175 lbs, non-smoker in good physical shape. I'm ready to meet someone who is attractive to me physically, age 21-40, prefer mustache (unless younger), fairly masculine, non-smoker and not into drugs. Spiritually: a zest for life (or working on it like me). Photo please. Thanks. Reply CUI Box AP55.

Smoker Preferred for Huggable Blond Fox Real cute, 24, 5'6", 125#, blue-green eyes, mustache, well proportioned little body. Warm & affectionate. Into tender, romantic nights with that special man who'll treat this babe with lotsa TLC and hold him tight all through the night. Mustache or beard, smoker, late 20s-early 40s, like beaches/long drives — all are plusses. Photo? Reply CUI Box AP56.

Dominant Black or Latin?

GWM, 38, 5'9", 155#, brown hair, blue eyes, would like to meet a dominant Black or Latin man who likes old movies, concerts, romantic evenings, weekend trips out of the city, foggy nights and cuddling and fondling all evening. If you like these things plus some bondage (you are top) and light s/m, please reply to Boxholder, 548 Castro #634, SF 94114.

Truth & Honesty!

I am GWM, youthful 47, ft., 6'11", have an average build, S/P hair, moustache, considered attractive. I am romantic, affectionate, sensitive, quiet, softspoken. I enjoy simple things in life, social drinker, non-smoker. I desire to meet people having similar attributes, my preference is 35-47 y/o, 6' +. I am primarily concerned with meeting "people" as opposed to sexual encounters, thus all I will say for now is that I am g/p/ass. Let's meet first and see what happens next. Reply CUI Box AP58.

Romantic-Realist

Attractive GWM, 31 yrs old, 5'10", 170#, light brown hair, blue eyes, honest, playful and a good sense of humor, would like to meet a caring, energetic gay Black male in his 30s or 40s. If things like cuddling up to watch an old movie classic, going out to discover a new restaurant, cabaret shows, dancing, or just a quiet evening at home interest you, then write and tell me a little bit about yourself. Affection for Monterey, KBLX and Santa Barbara weekend getaways rate highly. No smokers or heavy drugs/alcohol please. Photo and telephone number appreciated. Reply CUI Box AP59.

WOMEN

Cunning Linguist

seeks contact with new informant. 40 year old student of language and humans who is working hard on becoming a better observer of own and others' behavior, that's me. Choosing more sensible friends. If you would like to meet an incurably political, funny picture painting, first alto singing, sweet, big lesbian, and if you are grown-up, trying to give yourself some slack and have a big mind and heart, reply CUI Box AP1.

Seeking Soft Dyke

to soothe my celibacy blues. Me: butch style androgynous, brunette, medium size and age. Mot: moderation in all things (religion, politics, health, attitude). You: soft, over 30. Do you like music? To dance? To wrestle? Flowers? Could you be my lover, hiking partner, symphony mate, a making-faces friend? Reply CUI Box AP2.

Let's Dance

Do you enjoy dancing, dining out, hot tubs, sipping wine by the fireplace & watching movies? Me too! I am a gorgeous sensual & shapely 26 yr old bi female. I am 5'3", 105 lbs, love to party & have a good time. Financially independent professional woman looking for similar fun-loving ladies for fun & friendship. Looking for Love

Can't figure out why a nice girl like me isn't in a relationship? You, too? My friends think I'm affectionate, witty, dependable, cuddly and cute, but wasting away my lonely nights in the office, movie theaters and dance classes. I love film, ballet, musicals, comedy, some sports and learning about ethnic cultures. You should be open to learning new things, over 30, "non-butch / fem," have a sense of humor and interested in having a relationship. Please write about yourself in 30 words or more. Women of color encouraged to reply. Reply CUI Box AP3.

that sudden attraction between two people can be so nice. I'm a 32 year old biochemist, well built, well adjusted, well read and looking to experiment with the right woman. If you are 30-40 yrs old, intelligent, professional, goodlooking, clean and sober and like the outdoors, food, music, conversation and sex, then let's get together and start a reaction. Reply CUI Box AP4.

Pratentuous Woman

I'd like to meet with you. I'm a jazzy woman, in great shape (late 40s). Professional (what?). Yes, I like to walk on the beaches, sit in front of the fireplace, etc. — who doesn't? What about being part of the establishment politically? Into ballet, great dinners, sunning and being stunning. Oh yes, I've my 501s, also gowns, Brooks Bros., Banana Republic, etc. But you're still naked under your clothes. Vices: champagne, good wines — don't smoke, like women who don't. Into passion. Photo would be nice (will return). Reply CUI Box AP5.

If You Got the Time...I Got the Place

With "Women's Weekend" up the River the first weekend in May, I have the perfect place to stay at the "Woods," unfortunately no one to spend it with. So if you like sun, adventure, dancing, playing, all the above plus plenty of rest and relaxation too, and are somewhere between 21 and 40, cute, cuddly, honest, sincere with a sense of humor, hopelessly romantic and not too terribly into substance, then drop me a line and let's get acquainted for that long weekend ahead and possibly even more. P.S. Be daring and take a chance, you'll never know unless you try. Reply CUI Box AP6.

You're Tops

Black bottom, 6 ft., 170, 38, seeks hung, hot Latino and white tops for hot, safe (condom) action, deep, fast, furious. Show me who is boss — let me beg for it. Nica, round, bubbly butt, large nipples. Come on big guys, go for it. Photo appreciated/exchanged. Reply CUI Box AP64.

Well Hung Top Wanted

Very handsome GWM, 32, 5'7", 138 lbs, wavy brown hair and bedroom eyes seeks attractive, dominant, hung, masculine male for long, hot, safe sessions. I'm masculine, very well built (sports and gym), nice cock and large, shaved balls with a beautiful, smooth, firm, sexy, hot butt. Non-smoker (not an issue), light drinker, and love to occasionally get high and feisty with another good looking, masculine male, any age, race, fantasy. Descriptive letter, photo returned to C.U. Re-Surfacing

After ending a relationship a year ago, I find I'm still not quite bouncing back fully. It's been OK being alone again and spending time with friends. But honestly, I would like some younger, enthusiastic, playful, responsible and very handsome or cute stranger to come along and pull me out of this emotional lethargy. I'm not exactly resisting people; I've just been hibernating and standing in the background. I'm not everyone's type physically, but most consider me nice looking, young 37, 5'9", 145, brown curly hair, moustache, beard. I'm warm, super-smart, honest, funny, reliable. If you can be patient with me and help me heal, you will have the time of your life. Send photo and letter. Reply CUI Box AP66.

Kinky Top Wanted

Button Downs and Blazers

If you're a "young professional" between 24 and 36, collegiate-looking (clean shaven, short haired, nicely built), bright and well read, unaffected, articulate, friendly, good humored and a snappy conservative dresser — well, we just might have something in common: maybe we ought to compare notes. I'm 27, an ivy league grad now working in the financial district. I'm enthusiastic about books (I majored in American literature), movies (once a professional film critic), music (of diverse sorts, especially twentieth-century classical), baseball — and San Francisco. Non-smoker, non-drug user, not much of a drinker. Send a letter, send a picture! I'll bet that, at the very least, we could have a nifty conversation. Reply CUI Box AP75.

Affectionate and Kinky

Looking for: someone emotionally mature but young in spirit, even child-like. Boyish games which include a little wrestling to get at each other's balls, slapping them enough to touch pain, working on each other's butt with paddles, some straps and hand, jacking cocks together. At the same time, mature affection so that we connect in several of our chakras and we combine auras to create one. I'm 56, exciting, attractive body, 5'9", 150 lbs. Want the above. Don't bother with jo calls, want to meet and do it. Reply CUI Box AP76.

Great Catch

Handsome Italian/Spaniard mixture, ex-New Yorker, passionate, intelligent, aggressive, sensitive but firm and health conscious. I am 30, 5'8", 147 lbs, dark hair and eyes with well built, gym-maintained, body. Am very stable, articulate, well traveled and independent. Interests are theater, film, dance, art, outdoors and Italian cooking. You have life goals, realistic expectations, a positive outlook and compatible interests. If you think we've been looking for each other and share some things in common, please write and let's see. Reply CUI Box AP77.

Athletic Black Male

6'2", 210, 34, brown/black, moustache, beard, seeks tall, well hung, athletic G or BWM. I enjoy sports, cooking, the theater, antiques, quiet evenings and making new friends. I do not smoke, use drugs or poppers. I drink moderately or on special occasions. I am versatile sexually and could be more for the right person. Please enclose photo and/or phone. Fun with Rope

25 year old GWM with brown hair, brown eyes and average good looks desires friends who enjoy bondage and perhaps some light discipline: being tied standing spread-eagled in a doorway, hogtied naked, or being handcuffed together are a few possibilities. You are 20-29, trim GWM looking for a responsible friend who enjoys safe sex. Send letter with photo, phone to POB 3633, Walnut Creek 94598.

Erotic Friendships

Independent masseur not looking for Mr. Right. I lust for hot i/o, frotage, companionship — even intellectual stimulation. Romance, yes. Monogamy, no. I'm 5'8", 135#, 33, dark, smooth, hard, usually mellow, yet with a strong need for lots of variety in life. Serious talk about masculinity and femininity makes me giggle. My many interests lean toward the artistic, the outdoors and the sensual/spiritual. I'm flexible, but my ideal men are hunkier and hairier than me, enthusiastic, sensitive, non-smoking, growth oriented and fun in an unconventional/off-the-wall way. Reply CUI Box AP79.

One Good Man

GWM, 36, brown hair, blue eyes, bearded, no drugs, clean, very light drinker seeks loving, caring monogamy. Massage and sensual delights and intellectual stimulation are top priorities. Hairy blonds are special fantasy. Would like response from serious persons looking for long term or live together relationship only. Descriptive letter with likes, dislikes and photo gets mine. South Bay area only. POB 802, Campbell 95009.

I'm all of the above, also physically active, love music, the arts, reading, conversation. I'm a non-smoker and HTLV-3 negative, would prefer the same. Facial/body hair a plus. Reply CUI Box AP91.

Hot Dog Seeks Buns

Do you relish the thought of an oversize frank between your firm little buns? And how about having your smooth body wrapped in the arms of a tall, trim, handsome, athletic big brother? This sensual, romantic, 6'1" 34 year old, 175 lb, clean shaven SF professional seeks a smooth little brother to awaken in my arms on weekdays and to wrestle away the weekends. If you think you can cut the mustard, reply with photo. Reply CUI Box AP92.

Japanese Art Student

seeks friendship with a tall (over 5'8") and older (over 50) professional WM who is warm, discreet, supportive and intelligent. No drugs or bar types. I'm late 20s, male, 5'8", 135 lbs, attractive, positive, sincere and witty. I enjoy books, museums, animals, sports, ocean, travel, ballet, music, art, etc. Please write with photos (all will be answered). Reply CUI Box AP93.

Daddy Seeks Son

who is employed, ambitious, professional, willing to share, build and grow together. You should be GWM, 25+, responsible, energetic, monogamous and carry own social and financial responsibilities. No drugs. Daddy is handsome, 48, GWM, balding and successful professional. Warm, outgoing, masculine, articulate, educated and not into bar scenes — a teddy bear, excellent health, bodybuilder, ambidextrous. You too must be HTLV-3 negative and send picture with descriptive letter. Reply CUI Box AP94.

Touching Your Heart?

Good men of all colors — do you have room in your heart for that special someone who is a sensitive, intelligent Asian-American bodybuilder in his 30s with boyish handsome looks and beautiful physique? How about you and I, both with strong bodies, warm hearts, caring souls courage to be vulnerable, ability to recognize his own flaws, journey into the sunset together? Love means taking risks in opening up one's heart! Reply with photo to CUI Box AP95.

We Aim to Please

Two tall, bearded, hairy, hung and goodlooking GWMs, 30s, looking for similar someone who enjoys having the safe, undivided attention of two hot men. Send a photo — we'd love to see you — to 584 Castro, Box 151, SF 94114.

Affectionate, Bright, Healthy & Single

I'm very much of all of the above — and more. Also honest, handsome, creative, sensitive and full of life. Anxious to date similar men, 24-42, non-smokers or drug users who avoid risky sex. I enjoy the arts & politics, especially music and movies. I adore Barbra, Holly and Liz — not just their talent but their values, too. Sense of humor important, spiritual awareness, nice, kissing & cuddling essential. I'm 6', 177 nautilus lbs, baby blue eyed, hirsute, 31. All responses with photo guaranteed a reply. Reply CUI Box AP96.

Bondage/Leather Fuck Buddy Wanted

GWM, 30s, gdlkg, looking for leather buddy to explore & expand fantasies, hot i/o scenes, phone i/o, letter exchange, etc. I'm dark haired, hairy, 'stache, into leather, rubber, Levis, bondage, v/a, t/d, boots, hot sweaty scenes, etc. Fuck buddy should be aggressive, hot and basically top. Want a man who can teach me some new tricks and make me satisfy his fantasies. Descriptive letter, phone, photo to Boxholder, 55 Sutter St, Suite 665, SF 94104.

Goodlooking, Well Built and Hairy

Goodlooking blond, 39, hung, 5'11", swimmer's build, moustache, mostly top but occasionally versatile, wants well built, hairy, goodlooking men about same height for safe sex. Prefer men from 25-40 who are healthy, well built, hairy, hot and masculine. Respond with photo/phone. Boxholder, POB 274, SF 94101.

Mutual Interests

Handsome, athletic, cleancut SF attorney, 34, 6'1", 176, with a ready smile, seeks other hopeless romantics who want to get to know each other over dinner in the City, running by the Bay or along the beach, bicycling and hiking in Marin, cross-country skiing and rafting in the Sierras, and weekends away together if that is where the friendship leads. I may be a satyr in the sack and in front of the proverbial fireplace, but in the long run, I'm looking for someone who not only enjoys a good romp with my body, but who can expand my interests as I expand his. Like anyone else, I want you to be an attractive man who is as committed to his health and body as I am to mine, but beyond that, I'm seeking personal qualities — a sense of humor, a fascination with life and ideas, a solid appreciation of self, and creative ways of showing your affection. Send a photo to CUI Box AP97 and I will reply.

Manfriend Wanted

GWM, masculine, youthful 40, average + looks, non-smoker, 5'9", 159 lbs, moustache, good self-esteem, self-reliant, self-employed. Wide interests, enthusiastic, positive outlook, gym-toned, work/success motivated and relationship oriented. Traditional values/virtues and background. Intelligent, sexually versatile and uninhibited. Seek youthful, compatible man for ecstatic loving partnership and want to share personal times and intimate pleasures of loving and being loved. Warm heart and personality more than looks. Please start a great future by sending a letter with photo if possible (returned). Reply Boxholder, 2269 Market St #295, SF 94114.

Good Man Wanted

by GWM, 44, 6', 180 lbs, brown hair, blue eyes, moustache. I'm masculine, attractive, educated, easygoing, serious, yet funloving, young in attitude. My interests/activities include music, the beach, movies, exercise (aerobics & jogging), and current events. You are 30-45 with somewhat similar qualities and interests and are responsible, supportive, open and serious about relationships. We're both looking for a quality friendship, possibly more. Let's try and find it with each other. Tell me about yourself and send a photo. Reply CUI Box AP98.

The Land of Hanales!

Puff the Magic Dragon lives near the sea and wants to frolic in the spring mist among the redwoods with Dragon Hunter in magical kingdom overlooking the Russian River. Puff is big (6', 275 lbs), masculine, hairy and bearded with very hot, fiery, stimulating mouth that's excellent for blowing. If interested, write/photo: Boxholder, Box 1461, Guerneville 95446. (Looks not as important as hunting skills.)

Sweet Dreams

Cute GWM, 35, wants to find (and keep) that "special," masculine, handsome and sincere GWM, 30-40, who's ready to start a monogamous relationship. Preference goes to a non-smoker, light drinker, cuddler with old-fashioned values, enjoys home life and wants "one sweet man." If you fall into this "rare" category, respond with a letter, photo (a must) and put an end to this ongoing need! Reply CUI Box AP99.

Intelligent, nice looking GWM (37), seeks companion to explore the eventuality of a nurturing relationship. Interests include arts, films, plays, music, walks, politics, children and many more. Do not take a chance responding if non-committed, dishonest, unable to share feelings, emotions, and not knowing what you want. Prefer 30s to mid-40s and no drug, little alcohol. Photo preferred, however not mandatory. Reply CUI Box AP100.

Adventurer

WM, 36, 5'8", 140 lbs, seeks passionate, intellectual, lean, hard man about 30 to 45 to share love and adventures. Some of mine: 1000 mile solo mountain bicycle tour, three-day footless hike after a visit from a bear, lecturing in mathematics at Princeton University, holding my newborn babies, backpacking in a winter snowstorm, breaking 7 minutes per mile in a 10K, visiting the Rawhide and the Ambush in a skirt and high heels, studying jazz dance. Safety conscious. Your photo gets mine. Reply CUI Box AP101.

Do you like sharing time with someone who is intelligent, goodlooking, financially successful, physically and mentally in good shape? So do I. If you are in your upper 20s to low 30s and find the bars to be only one of many ways to spend your time, send a letter with photo (photo if possible) to: CUI Box AP102.

Masculine and Quiet

38 y.o. GWM, professional, 162 lbs, 5'10", strong weightlifter, interested in psychology and spirituality. I'm on top sexually. I like it rough, and I like it tender. Hot sex has been easy to come by; intimacy has been more rare. You are masculine, my age or younger, professionally established, and tend to be on the bottom sexually. You are experienced enough to know the difference between sharing and symbiosis and you are looking for a sexual friend, not just a fuck buddy. Let's meet and talk and take it slow. Send photo. Reply CUI Box AP103.

How Much Energy Do You Have?

I have lots, which I spend having as much varied fun as possible. Love the outdoors, love the City. Love beaches and sunsets, love theater and music. Love parties, love quiet times. Love strength, love gentleness: Love passion, love honesty. Laughing is essential, but I'm not afraid to cry. Though I enjoy a fast pace and am often insane, I'm responsible. Interested in exploring new boundaries in human relationships while continuing to have fun without harm. In my 30s, 5'11", 150 lbs. I'm in growth mode, keeping my body fit, my mind alert, and my spirit nurtured. If much of this sounds like you, drop me a line and prepare for a challenge! Reply CUI Box AP104.

Not Too Grown Up Myself

Man, thirty, masculine, good person, looking for open, friendly guy under twenty for close, touching friendship. Want to share emotions, experience, play and the love I have to give, with a young person. Sex not the main point, but relationship desired. Your maturity and desires very important to me in defining relationship. I like being equals. Not into drugs. Live in East Bay. If you want to talk and share with an intelligent man, who wants to help others (and myself) to be more, get in touch. Reply CUI Box AP105.

Yes, You — With the Heart!

You, the masculine 25-40 year old with the thin to medium build, any race, not super hairy, who can be shy but loves communication, who doesn't depend on achievements, possessions, tobacco or substances, who preferred caring, committed monogamy even before the epidemic — yeah, you! Wanna mate? Wanna meet a moderately goodlooking, bearded East Bay teacher, 36, 5'11", 155, into psychology, spirituality, nature walks, city events, gay community, and cuddling? Reply with photo, phone to CU! Box AP106.

Let's Be Negative!
Positive minded gay man seeking monogamous relationship with another man who is HTLV-3 negative. I am an attractive, reliable, 37, 5'10", 155 lbs man of Scandinavian origin, and would enjoy sharing my interests in classical music, film opera & Italian cooking with a man who is easygoing and down to earth, non-smoker preferred. If you enjoy being bottom and are between 25-50, please write me with phone and photograph. Reply CUI Box AP107.

Ironie Wit
with humor from the far side in 41 y.o. GWM: professional, 6'3", 172, 32" w. very fair; frisbee, golf, tennis, massage, nautilus, orchids, outdoor interests; no smoke, no drugs, rare alcohol. Looking for bright, slim, athletic GM companion, any age, with similar inclinations and lively offbeat sense of humor — for frisbee, golf or other activities. Reply CUI Box AP108.

The New Nuclear Family
29 y/o gay father with one child seeks male (father or not) to develop monogamous relationship. Parenthood is an important part of my life. Yet, I need a man to love & be loved by. Enter you, sincere GWM, 25-35, mature enough to respect my obligations as a parent knowing that I will make time for you & me to develop as a couple. So, if you're potentially attracted to a trim 5'7" GWM with blond hair & beard, write me. Reply CUI Box AP109.

Springtime in the Backcountry
Affectionate, 46 y/o, 170, 6'1", good shape and much into nature and easygoing adventures seeks somewhat younger (late 20s-30s), mellow, masculine, intimate pal to share double sleeping bag, 4 x 4, fireside massage, and the joy of the trail. Box 31102, SF 94131.

Ready for Wanton Horseplay
Accomplished Latin, 37, 5'10", 155 lbs, packaged in a youthful, well defined muscular body with brown hair, eyes and moustache. Very hot looking, and loves to play rough. Tie me up, torment me and tease me all night long. Dad, I'm waiting for you! Father figure is 27-45, hot, well built, hung, sane, super horny, slow to cum and kinky.

Let's indulge our fantasies in a safe and fun manner. Great if it leads to a long term affair. Get in touch with descriptive letter and photo to: Box 5719, SF 94101. Don't delay!

Show Me...
Hopeless case music addict seeks similar for concerts and cuddling with the headphones on. Habit includes Joplin, Pretenders, Heads, Doors, Metheny, Joni, Airplane, Corea, Bowie, Jarrett and most any innovative rock or jazz. Other habits include roller coasters, spicy foods, movies, nighttime walks, gardening, beaches, Bloom County, nature's beauty, hot springs, friends and enjoying life. I'm 34, a little shy and low key, 5'8", 165, brown hair and beard, healthy, reliable and strong. Value gentleness, individuality, responsibility and commitment. Would love to find someone who shares some of the above interests and who also seeks emotionally and physically close long term relationship — lots of hugs and kisses and a place to call home. Reply CUI! Box AP110.

Birthdays Can Come True. He is Looking for You.
He just turned 35 and needs to meet a straightforward and honest man. He'll charm you with a heart of gold, shining blue eyes and a wonderful smile. He's a lot of fun, great company, adventurous with charm. He's looking for someone his age — a strong man to match his strength and integrity. Reply CUI Box AP111.

Romantic Italian
Attractive art therapist, 35, 6', 165#, moustache, healthy, non-smoker, very sensual, affectionate, easygoing, sense of humor, intelligent, seeks a romantically monogamous relationship. Enjoy massage, cooking, art, photography, holistic health, spirituality, music, travel, nature, nude sunbathing. Prefer someone who has been in a long term relationship before — not afraid of intimacy, sharing, love. No drugs or bar types. Photo/phone appreciated. Reply Boxholder, Box 640444, SF 94164.

Halloween Boy/Girl?
You tried it? You liked it! Have fun in skirts & panties year round. Tall, slim, attractive, mature man with great costume collection seeks small, cute guy for fantasy fun & safe sex including role playing, posing, j/o, striptease, massage, spanking or whatever turns you on. Smooth, tan skin & long hair much appreciated. All races welcome. Reply Boxholder, #2603, 495 Ellis, SF 94102.

Wanted: Adventurous Bottom
Considerate, imaginative, attractive, b/bl, GWM, 5'8", young looking 31, slender, healthy, intelligent, hard-working professional, horny, well hung top with passions for: cinema, theater, banana-covered waffles, handcrafts, exercise, bicycling, traveling, pasta, romance, honesty, jockstraps. Goal: adventuring with new buddy. Descriptive letter, photo to CUI! Box AP112.

Creative Love
wanted by artist. I want a GWM who is sincere and easygoing, easy to look at, considerate, non-smoker, maybe not rich, but not poor, strong in character and happy. I am all of these. I am also 38, GWM, blue eyes, brown hair, 5'9", 150, clean shaven, muscular gymnast build, talented, educated. Interested in love, romance, (safe) hot sex, sharing. POB 421142, SF 94142-112.

Quiet Guy Seeks a Buddy &... perhaps more — GWM, early 50s, good shape, 6', 170, blk & gry, medium build. Looking for buddy, age range 40-55, who is non-smoker, not into bars. Enjoy music, walking, movies, quiet evenings at home, regular church-goer. Love to cuddle and to sleep with a guy, favorite sexual activities are mutual j/o and tit play — used to love oral, but am HTLV-3 neg and intend to keep it that way. Please reply with a brief description and phone # — let's talk & see if we can start something nice! Reply CUI Box AP113.

In the Wind
Artistic easyrider, 6', lean, bearded, late 30s, massively overeducated writer seeking younger, slim, bright, wildly submissive saddle mate who appreciates the open road, secluded beaches, choice movies, music, books, monogamy, good talk, relaxed silence, rarified candlelight pleasures. A strong hand and the touch of leather. Detailed letter and photo to POB 20541, Oakland 94620.

Seeking a Gay or Bi Married Man
Gay man, 41, attractive, trim and healthy, presently in a long term (platonic) relationship seeks an unpretentious and very affectionate man who is married but would like a special relationship (both sexual and emotional) with another warm, sensitive and caring man. An interest in the arts (especially classical music) would be nice. Descriptive letter and photo appreciated. Reply CUI Box AP114.

Where are the Bears?
Teddy seeks like-minded man for cuddle time! Enjoy quiet time holding, laughing, being together. Have many interests both in/out of bed. Enjoy outdoor activities — love to swim, bike ride, hike in redwoods. I'm 38, 5'10", 188 lbs, bearded w/brown hair & eyes. Like hairy bearded men. Tall & husky is fine! Come spend some time together in my den and let's enjoy the River area this summer! Photo & letter gets mine. Reply Boxholder, POB 2153, Guerneville 95446.

Trojan Preppie
Cleancut, trim "preppie type" GWM/u35 desired for a serious relationship. Prefer non-smoker, religious orientation, quiet or shy, must be healthy, emotionally and financially stable. I enjoy theatre, arts, out of doors, weekend trips, bicycling, massage, cuddling, dining in/out. Do you have similar interests? No drugs or bar scene. Safe sex only (Trojans?). Tell me about yourself, include photo if possible. I'm GWM, 46, POB 590951, SF 94159.

Adventurous bottom with passions for: romance, playful times, erotic tit play, exercise, dildos, traveling, kink. Seeking adventurous, affectionate top for ongoing relationship. Descriptive letter, photo please to CUI! Box AP115.

Empty Bed Blues
Tired of hugging pillows in half-empty bed and making inane breakfast conversation with pet parrot. Ready to start a relationship, build new friendship and enjoy the intimacies that come as a reward. Me: 36, 6'2", 185#, blue eyes, light brown hair. Goodlooking with trim, healthy, gym-toned body. Work out regularly & enjoy swimming, bicycling and walking. Other pleasures include cooking, dinners with fine wine, films, TV and animated conversations with friends. Romantic in me longs for candlelit dinners, sunsets at the beach, sharing a pup tent in the mountains, slow dancing to sensual music, snuggling under crispy fresh sheets and getting frisky. Ideal You: similar age, tall, muscular/athletic build, dark haired, cleanshaven or moustache, deep voice. Healthy non-smoker, no drug or alcohol dependency. Positive outlook, good sense of humor and easygoing demeanor. Hope to feel/sense some chemistry at work. If you think we might be right for each other drop me a line (photo especially appreciated) and we'll take it from there. Respond to: Box 6133, Albany 94706.

Seeking Butch Tops
GWM, 6', 180, 34, bodybuilder. Am very attractive, professional and looking for bodybuilder tops with intelligence to match their bodies. Prefer 30-45 and 6' or taller. I enjoy masculine men who are confident enough about themselves to have a good time but can be tender and loving. Looking for Mr. Right is hard work but can be rewarding with the right man. Take a chance! Let's both be surprised that there are real people with realistic goals. Photo and phone please. Reply CUI Box AP116.

Questionnaire Instructions

Step 1. Enter your mailing address (for our confidential use).

Step 2. Enter your contact information and a brief description of yourself and/or your interests (so new members can contact you).

Step 3. Describe Yourself by circling the word me beside each descriptive item which is a true description of yourself. You should circle at least one me under each category. Circle more than one, where appropriate.

Step 4. Describe Your Ideal Match by circling the word veto, no, ok, or yes beside each and every item (including those by which you circled me) to indicate to what extent you would want that item to be true of your match. Circle exactly one of these responses per item.

Circle yes if you would like for that description to be true for your match. (This is a "vote for a trait," not a guarantee.) Circle ok if you don't care one way or the other. (This is an "abstention" - no vote either way.) Lines left blank count as ok. Circle no if you would dislike for that description to be true for your match. (This is a "vote against" - not a disqualification.)

Circle veto if you want to disqualify with anyone for whom that description is true, even if they have other desirable qualities. (This is a "disqualification" and is not affected by category rank.) We recommend that you circle between 10 and 20 vetos to restrict age, race, residence, and other important traits of your matches. Note: We guarantee 20 matches minus your number of vetos over 10. For example you are guaranteed 13 matches if you circle 17 vetos. If you circle 30 or more vetos you are not guaranteed any matches. You will receive one dollar credit per match less than the guaranteed number, applicable to future ComQuest orders.

Step 5. Rank the Categories. The questionnaire is divided into 16 categories. To insure that your responses on less important items will not override your responses on the more important items, you must indicate which items are important to you. There are two ways, using the blank to the left of each category heading. Either: Rank each category from 1 to 16 in its order of importance to you, with 1 as the most important and 16 as the least (use each number once), or Put a check mark in the blank beside the five most important category headings, leaving the rest blank.

Note: Your matches will be based mostly upon the more important categories, with the less important ones serving only as the breakers. No's and yes's have very little effect in the lower ranked or unchecked categories. Some of your matches may have traits by which you circled no. (Vetos work the same regardless of category rank.)

Example: There is an example of how a hairy man with a mustache looking for a smooth partner with a mustache should mark the form if he regarded "Facial/Body Hair" as his second most important category.

2. Facial/Body Hair

me veto no ok yes	Smooth (rarely shaven)
me veto no ok yes	Clean shaven
me veto no ok yes	Mustache/goatee
me veto no ok yes	Full beard
me veto no ok yes	Smooth (no body hair)
me veto no ok yes	Hairy legs, smooth chest
me veto no ok yes	Hairy chest, smooth back
me veto no ok yes	Very hairy (fuzzy beard)

What's the Final Step?

When you have completed the application, carefully remove it from this publication, and mail it and a check or money order for $30 to the address at the bottom of the questionnaire.

How Long Will It Take?

You will normally receive your matches within 14 days of our receipt of your application. Please call us after 21 days if you fail to receive your order by then.

Step 1 - Please print your name and mailing address below. This is only for our use in mailing you your matches, and is kept confidential.

ALCOHOL, DRUGS... AND AIDS

There is growing evidence of a significant connection between AIDS and alcohol and drug abuse.

Substance abuse is an issue we can no longer afford to ignore.

Drugs and alcohol don't cause AIDS. AIDS is caused by a virus. But there are at least three ways in which alcohol and drugs can increase your chances of getting AIDS.

First, alcohol and drugs depress the immune system and make you more susceptible to disease.

Alcohol, marijuana, speed, cocaine, poppers, and other recreational chemicals lower your resistance to disease. In some research studies, poppers have been implicated in increasing the risk of KS. Drugs and alcohol weaken your health. They increase stress rather than relieve it and help the AIDS virus overcome your body's defenses.

Second, alcohol and drugs reduce your ability to stick to judgments about what's safe and what isn't.

A huge majority of gay men in San Francisco have given up Unsafe Sex. For the relatively few who haven't yet, studies demonstrate a strong correlation between alcohol and drug use and Unsafe Sex.

Third, sharing IV drug needles transmits the AIDS virus directly from the bloodstream of one infected person to the bloodstream of another.

If you do take the risk of using IV drugs, don't share needles! It's a direct route for the transmission of AIDS. There are thousands of IV drug users in America with AIDS, and probably other thousands who are still incubating the virus and who are contagious. Don't share needles!

According to experts who treat substance abuse among gay men, we have had a major epidemic of substance abuse in our community for years—so much so that most of us have accepted substance abuse as a routine part of gay life. What was once routine, however, is now deadly.

If you want confidential and gay-sensitive information about substance abuse for yourself or for a friend, help is available. Contact 18th Street Services, 2152B Market Street, 861-4898, or call the AIDS Foundation's

AIDS HOTLINE, 863-AIDS, for a referral.

Remember:

- Sharing needles is dangerous. Don't share needles.
- Alcohol and drugs depress the immune system. Protect your health.
- Getting high can lead to Unsafe Sex and exposure (or re-exposure) to the AIDS virus.

Now is the perfect time to take a fresh look at your own use of alcohol and drugs—and to get some help (often free) to find out if you have a drinking or drug problem that may increase your chances of getting AIDS.
