Rhino stages gay one-acts
Two gay plays continue their run at Theatre Rhinoceros this month — Victor Bumbalo’s "Butch" goes drag, and "Rhinoceros" this month — Victor Bumbalo’s "Butch" goes drag, and "Rhinoceros"

I'm not sure what to predict, but I'm sure it won't be the same as the Latins, Blacks, Asians, and all under-represented communities. "Valdez" states.

To meet its yearly operating costs of nearly $100,000, the building has pursued private money in the past, from individuals, corporations and private foundations, a membership and pledge program, and rentals and benefits. With no government funding, the building relies on and remains faithful to the community it serves. Last year the Women's Building raised $82,000 through grass-roots fundraising efforts.

"People really support the building, says Goodman, "because the idea that women should have a place in their own community that's public makes sense to them. According to Goodman, the building has become a symbol for the community, as well as a community center where progressive people feel good about meeting. Initially, there was a lot of fear that a white, middle-class identificatory organization would not mix well with the community it serves. Last year the Women's Building relied on and remains faithful to the community it serves.

The building has historically functioned as a one-stop resource center for immigrant and social workers, and the Women's Building continues that tradition. The building also has a temporary kitchen and auditorium, an institutional kitchen and dance floor. The building at 1001 Harrison Street is a former athletic club renovated by the Sons of Norway. The building was recently purchased by the Women's Building for $200,000. The building now houses a center for women, as well as a resource/support for San Francisco's Mission District community.

Begun planning this project in 1978," says Roma Guy, one of the Women's Building's original organizers.

well in a Latino neighborhood. However, deliberate decisions were made to hire a staff composed of 50% of women of color. As a result, says Vazquez, "our capacity to work with community organizations such as Central de Colonos, and La Casita de Nicasia, is real, because the people we work with speak the language, are members of the culture, and understand what’s going on."

While women have made significant progress in building a coalition between third world and women’s groups, the building has also suffered some serious setbacks. Last February the building was the target of arson and fire damages estimated between $50-$100,000. "Our work was definitely slowed down, and the fire was in many respects a setback for reproductive rights; and expanding efforts for reproductive rights; and expanding
