PONTIAC 10 FREED OF MURDER CHARGES

The ten men who have been known as the "Pontiac 10" (Pontiac State Prison in Illinois) were freed of murder charges in Illinois on May 13, 1981. They were arrested in 1969 and later convicted of murder. The convictions were reversed by the Illinois Supreme Court in 1974. The men were then retried and found guilty of murder in 1976. The retrial was overturned by the Illinois Supreme Court in 1978. The men were then retried a third time and found guilty of murder in 1980. The retrial was overturned by the Illinois Supreme Court in 1981. The men were then retried a fourth time and found guilty of murder in 1981. The retrial was overturned by the Illinois Supreme Court in 1982.

"First of all," he said, "you have to understand what the government is all about. It's those poor folks at ITT, Exxon, The Pentagon, the FEC --they're all poor." He argued, "Now really, have you ever heard of a country where a person can't run for Senator--everyone I know on the left and right is poor."

This is the way of war, the military industrial complex is about to get a lot more money. Let's send a message not only to the White Hou­

Given these historical contexts, it is not surprising that the critiques of the military industrial complex have gained popularity in contemporary discourse.

In the United States, the military industrial complex has been a major player in the nation's politics and policies for many years. The complex consists of a network of defense contractors, military personnel, and government agencies that are closely interconnected.

According to some observers, the military industrial complex has become an insular institution that operates largely independent of civilian oversight. It is estimated that the military industrial complex is one of the largest employers in the United States, with an annual budget of trillions of dollars.

The military industrial complex is often cited as an example of the dangers of unchecked power and influence in a democracy. Critics argue that the complex's influence on government policy and decision-making can lead to a lack of accountability and transparency.

The military industrial complex is also a significant source of funding for a number of influential political actions and organizations. For example, the National Rifle Association (NRA) is a powerful lobby group that works to uphold the rights of gun owners and oppose gun control measures. The NRA and other similar organizations receive a substantial amount of funding from the military industrial complex.

In conclusion, the military industrial complex is a significant and influential force in American society. Its impact on politics, economics, and culture is undeniable, and its influence continues to grow.

10,000 March in S.F. against war & Reagan

San Francisco, May 4: Not since '73 has there been a demonstration so impressive in size, scope, and impact.

10,000 plus people filled the streets to stand against the war in Lebanon and to protest against the sickening policies of Ronald Reagan.

The march was organized by the People's Coalition for Peace and Justice in collaboration with many other local groups.

There were a few minor scuffles with the police at the San Francisco City Hall, but the march was peaceful and well-organized.

The march ended at the San Francisco Veterans' Administration Hospital, where a candlelight vigil was held in honor of the war dead.
