Reagan Cuts Off Funding For Gay Research Projects

Larry Busch

(Washington, D.C.) Federally-sponsored research in the area of gay homophobia is under threat. A White House budget official said that the proposed spending bill would cut the program which has funded research on gay issues for the past two years.

Philanthropist Phyllis T. Blum, who decided that they would no longer fund the research, said, “If I had to decide now, I’d fund it.”

The decision to cut funding came during a meeting between Blum and Assistant Secretary of Health and Human Services William Joyce Freitas turned the Elephant Lunchroom into a “White Night” riot at San Francisco’s Polk Street. At least 250 people were arrested and many businesses were looted.

Theresa, aorgh, was one of those who were arrested. She said, “I just wished I could have had more people to help me.”

U.S. Census May Release Data on Same Sex Households

Lorrie Brown

The U.S. Census Bureau is expected to release data on same-sex households in the near future, according to sources at the agency. Although no official announcement has been made, the Census Bureau has been working on a method to collect and analyze data on same-sex households for several years. The data will be included in the 1990 Census and will provide valuable information on the growing number of same-sex households in the United States. The data will be used by researchers, policymakers, and the public to understand the needs and challenges faced by same-sex households. The information will also be used to allocate resources and develop programs to support same-sex households. The data will be available for public use and will be accessible through the Census Bureau's website. The release of this data is a significant step towards greater understanding and acceptance of same-sex households. It will provide a clearer picture of the demographics, economics, and social characteristics of same-sex households, allowing for more informed decision-making and policy development.

Health Officials Step Up Program to Monitor Cancer Outbreak

Anne P. Kelly

Health officials are stepping up their efforts to monitor a cancer outbreak that has spread throughout the country. The outbreak has been linked to a specific strain of a virus that is transmitted through contaminated food and water. The officials are urging people to take precautions, such as washing their hands frequently and avoiding consumption of contaminated food and water. They are also working to identify the source of the outbreak and to contain it. The outbreak has caused significant concern and has led to a heightened level of awareness about the importance of food safety and hygiene. The officials are working closely with other health agencies and organizations to ensure that the outbreak is contained and that the public is protected.

Gay Task Force Reopens D.C. Office

Lorrie Brown

The Gay Task Force has reopened its office in Washington, D.C. This is a significant development for the gay community, as the Task Force has been a long-standing advocate for gay rights and issues. The reopening of the office is a testament to the ongoing commitment of the Task Force to support the gay community. The office will continue to provide a range of services and resources to the gay community, including legal assistance, counseling, and support services. The Task Force is also working to raise awareness about gay issues and to promote acceptance and equality for the gay community. The reopening of the office is a positive development for the gay community and a reminder of the ongoing struggle for gay rights.

Pacific Center Faces Funding Crisis

Bernie T. The Pacific Center, a prominent organization serving the gay and lesbian community, is facing a significant funding crisis. The center has lost 80% of its funding from the City of San Francisco and is in danger of closing down. The center provides a range of services and resources to the gay and lesbian community, including support services, counseling, and social services. The funding loss has put the center's future in jeopardy, and it is in urgent need of support from the community. The center is reaching out to the community for donations and support, and it is urging people to come together to save the center. The center is a vital resource for the gay and lesbian community, and its closure would be a significant loss.

Bay Area United Way Wants Gay Input

Roy O'Leary

Bay Area United Way is seeking input from the gay community about how to best support them. The organization is committed to providing equal opportunities and resources to all members of the community, and it is seeking input from the gay community to ensure that its efforts are effective. The organization is interested in hearing from the gay community about its needs and how it can best support them. This is an important opportunity for the gay community to be heard and to have their voices represented. The organization is committed to being inclusive and to providing equal opportunities for all members of the community.

Comprehensive Gay Study Presented to Psychologists

Anne P. Kelly

A comprehensive gay study was presented to psychologists at the annual meeting of the American Psychological Association. The study provides valuable insights into the experiences and challenges faced by gays and lesbians, and it highlights the need for greater understanding and acceptance of the gay community. The study is based on a survey of over 1,000 gay and lesbian individuals, and it provides a wealth of information about their experiences and challenges. The study is significant because it provides a clear picture of the challenges faced by the gay community and highlights the need for greater understanding and acceptance. The presentation of the study is a significant development for the gay community and a reminder of the ongoing struggle for acceptance and equality.

Leslie S. Warren, editor, came on a recent broadcast to answer questions about the status of a drug bust at the Trocadero, which some members of the gay community believe was a violation of civil rights.

William Jefferson, a member of the Dorothy Street Community Church, was cited for possession of a small amount of marijuana, and another member, a federal narcotics agent, was cited for attempting to obtain evidence.

Jefferson, who headed the investigation, says the bust was necessary to protect the community from drug dealers. He says the evidence was seized legally and that the community has been notified.

The Gay Rights Bill, pending in Congress, would make it easier for the community to challenge such actions.

Robert is the author of the book "Gay Power: A Guide to Gay Politics and Activism," and he is a regular contributor to national magazines such as "The Advocate" and "Out."
Ron Baker

George Platt Lynes' photography of the male nude body is superb, but highly idiosyncratic. Certainly 'prettiness' or the 'macho' look so popular among contemporary gay males held little fascination for him. Lynes practiced photography as art, not as visual journalism or a branch of advertisement. The three photographs on these pages highlight the technical virtuosity as well as the almost surrealistic or symbolic content of his work.

Lynes' preoccupation with the male nude spanned his entire career and the vintage photographs (i.e. prints made during his lifetime) at the Wirtz Gallery represent what surely must be the most complete collection of this area of his production yet assembled for public display.

According to his close associates, Lynes went to no great lengths to hide his sexual orientation, but certain works were deemed too controversial for the public sensibilities of the '40s and '50s. Several of the photographs, those which might be described as particularly 'homoerotic,' were published under a pseudonym for fear of jeopardizing his career.

Sally Duranay as Joan Crawford in Mommie Dearest

The sequel, which has its moments, focuses on the life of Rosalind Russell, the mother of Joan Crawford. Russell's performance is strong, but the film is too long and boring. The story is well told, but the acting is uneven, and the pacing is slow. The film is rated PG-13.

S.F. Symphony Plans Lavish Gala

Preliminary plans announced for San Francisco Symphony's Opening Gala in Davies Symphony Hall on September 8. The Gala, a benefit to the Symphony's long-term capital campaign, will be broadcast live at 8:30 p.m. on KQED television. Director Edo de Waart featuring guest conductor Pichas Zuckerman will be broadcast live at 8:30 p.m. on KQED television. The Opening Gala festivities begin at 7:30 p.m. with a standing first course featuring caviar, both donated by Smirnoff Reserve Vodka and "Tsarnicoulai" vodka. The Gala dinner, catered by Don Lipshi of Continental Catering, includes cold beet borscht and Blini a la Russe (Russian crepes) among other Russian specialty dishes.

The highlight of the long second act will be a gala of Russian music, preceded by an all-Tchaikovsky concert entitled "A Russian Summer Palace." The Gala will be broadcast live on KQED television.

The unique atmosphere created by this opening season, explains Gala Chairwoman Diana Dalton, "where guests may dine, dance and drink champagne, comfortably, enjoy a first-class concert and post-concert reception are all in one evening at our own beautiful new San Francisco tradition begun last season." Notes diners may "be surrounded by aект of this event carries forward a "Palace" theme.
