Prophesies of a Black AIDS Activist

SCREAMING INTO THE WIND

by Cathy Cockrell

Family weighed heavily on Larry Saxxon’s mind as he spoke recently, in his apartment in the Western Addition, about how to make a social revolution American-style and the best fried chicken Southern-style.

Our conversation traveled from the tin shack in Princess Anne, Maryland, where he was born, to San Francisco, where he has become a force for AIDS education in the black community; from Double Rock Baptist Church in the Hunters Point black community, where he spoke from the pulpit on AIDS, to a planned AIDS education project centered in Johannesburg, South Africa. He shifted gears and vernaculars, crossed cultures and continents, yet all paths led back to his multigenerational, racially mixed Florida clan, whose members know each other by names like “BoCat” and “Honeybee,” and to his only sister, “Big Red,” whose death last month hit home and hard.

Our main topic was AIDS and the black community. His sister Martha’s death from AIDS and Saxxon’s oldest stepbrother’s before her added depth and force to his prognosis that black America’s worst days are yet to come, that his own clan has in fact “come off light compared to many black families, that AIDS is “going to either make us or break us” as a race in this country.

“There have been families in little towns in Florida where the only person left is one grandmother taking care of one child that’s HIV positive,” Saxxon says. “Do you wonder why the Centers for Disease Control this year is calling its second national conference on AIDS in the ethnic minority communities? When the CDC sees the necessity to call a conference like this, you know we’ve got hell on high wheels on our hands!”

$70,000 Surplus from March's Coffers

Gay Groups Get Windfall

by George Mendenhall

The organizing committee of the National March on Washington for Lesbian and Gay Rights recently found itself confronting a problem that struck them as distinctly odd: how to distribute surplus funds from the last-minute fundraising campaign that was launched to pay for the hostages of last October's mammoth rally in the nation's capital.

Last weekend members of the steering committee met in San Francisco to discuss the names of 34 gay liberation and AIDS groups that will receive grants totaling nearly $70,000. The surplus is what remains from $440,000 raised, much of it during the march itself. The groups selected for funds were culled and AIDS groups that will receive grants include:

- AIDS Emergency Fund
- Project Open Hand
- The Godfather Fund
- Coming Home Hospice

The USS Missouri's Shipshape Crew

by George Mendenhall

became the center of "his majesty Neptune Rex, King of the Deep."

According to the tradition, the "wags are served a messmate, and a talent show is held amongst them in order to provide a 'quizz' for the majors. Missouri's "yellowjack" competitions were a deeply held treaty. With them, gambling, betting money and lock picking, they tried to outdo each other for the coveted title of 'quizz'. The show featured swimming for men."

The opportunity for more came when a poop of swabbies tried to lop each other in a push-up competition for another march. "We do not have to have marches like regular rituals," concluded Ault. "As long as we are getting the money into the right hands, we will go on."

"We wanted a sense of closure," Ault emphasized, "by giving the balance back to the community."

Ault reflected on the past — in 1985 the first March on Washiing, he says, "There was a growing need to strike. We had to show that there was a sort of community coming together around a march."

"A lot of us who were involved in the march started with no money. If there is no money, we have to set up a whole new organization to deal with that."

"The march started with no money. If there is no money, we have to set up a whole new organization to deal with that."

"A lot of us who were involved in the march started with no money. If there is no money, we have to set up a whole new organization to deal with that."

Ault said. "We just did not have enough money to get started." He added that after a few marches meeting and raising a few dollars on our own, we were able to evaluate those getting the funds to determine if the money would be properly spent." Ault said.

"There were no more worthwhile endeavors," Ault said. "It's just another way we were able to raise money for the march."

"We wanted a sense of closure," Ault emphasized, "by giving the balance back to the community."

Ault concluded, "A lot of us who were involved in two years with the march are just trying to come down. There was so much tension and mental exhaustion."

He believes the next major event must be the 25th anniversary of Stonewall in 1996. With more money, he added, "We should take the show on the road. That will raise a lot of planning."
The push to Washington was spearheaded by the National March on Washington for Lesbian and Gay Rights, which recently released a statement on its website, explaining the rationale behind the decision to hold a new march.

According to the statement, the organizers believe that the current landscape of LGBTQ rights has changed significantly since the last march in 2018, and that a new event is necessary to address the current challenges facing the community. The statement also emphasizes the importance of continuing the march tradition as a way to honor the history and legacy of the LGBTQ community.

that's "by and for black sexual minorities." With the SF AIDS Foundation, he is also a recovering alcoholic, Saxxon has many ways of working through his anger and pain, whether it's 15 minutes or two hours a day in the dark berry on the bush."

Saxxon spent his early years in Marshalltown, where his father was a barber and his mother, who died of cancer at 53, was a nurse. His parents, both immigrants from the Caribbean, instilled in him an understanding of the importance of education, community, and spirituality. Saxxon never went to college, and he often feels like he's "learning on the fly." He says, "I've always felt like having this black power force in my life." He is quiet; emotion still has a strong hold over him. Saxxon gives to politics. To worries over a system that doesn't value "the life of a black woman." Saxxon says, "I don't like it there. They don't understand me."

"A lot of black people feel there is this unspoken pressure to generalize America's culture of care. Saxxon says, "And I'm not concerned with that. I'm not concerned with how they're going to be. I'm only concerned with what they're doing to the black community. I mean, it's a big picture. I mean, it's a black revolution, it's a black dream. I mean, it's a lot of things. And I mean, it's a lot of people."

"The AIDS epidemic is changing. It's becoming more and more of a black epidemic. And I mean, I see the change. I see the change. I see the change. I see the change. I see the change. I see the change."

Saxxon's work has taken him to walk those other streets with me and see what I see. It's a daily duty. It's a daily duty. It's a daily duty. It's a daily duty. It's a daily duty. It's a daily duty. Castro Blood Drive Location Pending

Following last week’s duration of the AIDS in Arms blood drive in the Castro, officials from Irene Memorial Blood Bank, the Harvey Milk Club and AIDS Action announced that the dance in the Castro was being canceled. "We are veryReach ous," said Dr. Herbert Castro, "realizing the Castro area is in desperate need of blood." The Blood Drive was scheduled for Saturday, August 20.

Dr. Herbert Castro, chairman of the Castro Blood Drive, said that the decision was made by Irene Blood Bank officials, and that the event was being canceled due to lack of public interest. "We had about 200 people come out last week," said Castro. "But we need more than that. We need at least 500 people." The Blood Drive was scheduled for Saturday, August 20.

Gay Man Sentenced in Controversial Trial

SEATTLE, WA — A widely publicized, controversial Seattle trial ended in early July with a sentence of 7½ years (84 months) for the accused, a gay man named Steven Farmer. Farmer was convicted of two counts of sexual exploitation (for taking pictures of a minor and two counts of possessing a juvenile pornographic picture).

The trial was a high-profile case that drew national attention. The accused, Steven Farmer, was convicted of two counts of sexual exploitation (for taking pictures of a minor and two counts of possessing a juvenile pornographic picture).

Several factors contributed to the trial's high profile. First, the accused was a prominent gay activist and leader in the Seattle gay community. Second, the trial was the first in the state of Washington to address issues of sexual orientation and discrimination. Third, the trial raised important questions about the role of the media in shaping public opinion and the impact of media coverage on the outcome of legal proceedings.

The trial was widely covered by the media, with reports appearing in local, national, and international news outlets. The case also triggered a debate about the rights of gay men and the role of the media in shaping public opinion.

The trial concluded on July 5, with the judge sentencing Farmer to 7½ years in prison. The sentence was met with mixed reactions, with some saying it was too lenient and others saying it was too harsh. The case has raised important questions about the treatment of gay men in the criminal justice system and the role of the media in shaping public opinion.
EDITORIAL

Proposition A, the $105-million bond measure to build a new library and improve existing facilities, is a project everyone agrees on but few really fight for. That sort of com­promise approach might be acceptable if the library system were a small, localized one. But the San Francisco Public Library is the pride and joy of millions of people, a place everyone wants to see maintained and expanded. It is an irreplaceable resource for our community. It is a part of our cultural heritage, and it is indispensable to our quality of life.

The library is a place where we can learn about the world and ourselves. It is a source of knowledge and information, a place where we can find inspiration and solace. The new bond measure, Proposition A, would provide the funds necessary to build a new main library and expand existing branches. This is a project that is truly worth supporting. It is a project that is necessary to ensure that our library system remains strong and vibrant for future generations.

We urge all San Franciscans to support Proposition A. It is a project that is in the best interests of our community. It is a project that is necessary to maintain the quality of life we all enjoy. Please vote yes on Proposition A.

AIDS Activist Opposed to Memorial Garden

Lemcke Project Needs Community Input

The announcement of plans to create an AIDS memorial garden at Harvey Milk Plaza is certainly a somber anniversary for local AIDS activists. In my opinion, the proposed site for this new memorial is not the best location for such a project.

One of the first concerns that came to my mind was the question of just how appropriate it is to locate such a memorial in the Castro. While the area is certainly a place of remembrance and healing for many in our community, I believe that a better location would be needed to truly honor the memory of those who have lost their lives to AIDS.

Perhaps it would be best to use some gay or lesbian artist to create an AIDS memorial. Let's have some discussion and consider other options.

AIDS Forum Draws 200 City Workers

A near-capacity crowd of 200 Hall of Justice employees came to the San Francisco AIDS Foundation, and several weeks in the planning, had been expected to draw approximately 100 people.

The event, several weeks in the planning, had been expected to draw approximately 100 people.

In response to Coltharp's question, most of the audience raised their hands. Coltharp then announced that the training needed to go out and educate others would be provided. The audience was then asked to rest by saying, "If you don't have sex today, I am more than willing to devote my time to trying to help you in whatever way I can."

Coltharp then addressed the audience that PWAs want to be treated the same as anyone else. He put the question of individual risk in the workplace and related legal issues. He was speaking the follow-up programs for the Hall of Justice which would be held on July 26 and August 16. The audience was then asked if they had any questions. The audience was then asked if they had any questions. The audience was then asked if they had any questions. The audience was then asked if they had any questions. The audience was then asked if they had any questions.

Legal Challenge Fails
Dannemeyer-Gann Initiative Remains

by Charles Linzburger

On August 9's Sacramento Superior Court beat back legal challenges to the Dannemeyer-Gann initiative, an action which effectively ended efforts by gay and AIDS activist groups to stop the proposition in the courts before the November election. Now Proposition 102 will be put before the state's voters in the fall presidential election and, if passed, will end anonymous HIV testing in California and institute forced reporting of all positive HIV tests and contact tracing of the sex partners of those testing positive.

"It means we're going to have to vote on it in November, and I think that's bad," said Mark Cole, an attorney with the San Francisco Chapter of the American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU) who had argued that Prop. 102 was taken off the ballot.

Cole, who is best known locally to the author of the city's gay rights law, said: "Any initiative process requires a lot of money and effort, but this is not a sure thing. People are tired of working against stupid initiative campaigns and giving money to fight stupid initiative campaigns."

Schatz said he believed it was still possible with only 2½ months left before the election to defeat the proposition. "I think we can still win. We have a lot to do and we have a lot left to do," he said regarding the possibility of what he put in a submission. But they don't have the resources."

Bill Schatz of National Gay Rights Advocates, who had argued against the Dannemeyer-Gann initiative, said that the showing on August 9 was a major move by the respected AIDS service provider into the realm of AIDS civil rights battles. Schatz told the Sentinel that his August 9 appearance in support of gay rights would confirm: "More of us are going to have to fight these things."

Cole also told the Sentinel that he believed passage of the initiative would be turned aside if Prop. 102 passes in November, but he cautioned: "Many of us have not been able to fight against Prop. 102."

``People are tired of working against stupid initiative campaigns and giving money to fight stupid initiative campaigns,"" said Matt Coles, an attorney with the American Civil Liberties Union. "We believe that Prop. 102 is a dangerous piece of legislation."

The legal battle will be challenging. Coles also told the Sentinel that he believed passage of the initiative would turn efforts against AIDS. "The best education against AIDS and Prop. 102 is a lot of us, and if people think that their names are going to come out or if they think that the text of Prop. 102 is going to come out, they won't go to the polls."

And that will mean that lots more people will be infected and lots more people will die.

``The other proposition, authored by Mayor Agnos, would forbid the expenditure of any city money on the health department if they test people's names are going to go on a list at the health department. If they test for HIV, they want to do it in a supportive, even fun, environment."

The effort to fight Dannemeyer-Gann initiated by Mayor Agnos would fail, if passed."

Schatz said that the legal battle will follow, if the measure is approved."

The other proposition, authored by Mayor Agnos, would forbid the expenditure of any city money on the health department if they test for HIV, the Sentinel reported. Coles agreed with Cole that the fight against Prop. 102 is going to go hard going. "We're a tight ship,\n

FDA Drug Approval: Major Reform Considered

A behind-the-scenes effort to reform the federal drug approval process has recently become public through an editorial in the

Wall Street Journal (August 2) and a major article in the New York Times (August 7). The effort, spearheaded by Dr. Richard Kan

the Regulatory Task Force on Regulatory Reform, has identified four major problems with the current system:

1. The FDA would work more closely with companies on phase II and phase III trials so that any potential problems could be alleviated. The current system requires that new drugs be tested in a series of trials, each of which must demonstrate safety and efficacy. This can be expensive and time-consuming, and some drugs may never reach the market because of the lengthy process.

2. The FDA would publish detailed guidelines for companies on making drug applications. Currently, companies must guess at what the FDA will require, which can lead to costly delays and rejections.

3. The FDA would establish a mechanism for public comment on proposed drug applications. This would allow experts and the public to provide feedback on the safety and efficacy of new drugs before they are approved.

4. The FDA would be more transparent and accountable. Currently, the FDA is often criticized for its lack of transparency and for making decisions that are not in the best interest of patients.

The goal of the reform effort is to create a system that is more efficient, transparent, and accountable, while still ensuring the safety and efficacy of new drugs. It is hoped that this will lead to faster and more effective drug development and approval.

CONFESSIONS OF A TUTU KEEPER

WARDROBE MASTER GEORGE ELVIN
THE MAN BEHIND SF BALLET'S
COSTUME CLOSE-OUT AT SF BALLET

Eric Hellman

July 1988

When you're order-taker or costume dolphin, it simply doesn't come off too well. Your name isn't listed in the program, your job is not a typical one. Routine tasks, it seems, are far more satisfying.

_Son:__

1,000 AIDS brochures and pamphlets are properly — and happily — fitted in their system. Any of the velcro snaps. Or the caterpillars in _The Annex. The biggest headache is finding the right costume on time. If it's a new costume, it can take weeks. Even if it's an old costume, it can take hours.

Elvin tells me that the biggest headache is finding the right costume on time. If it's a new costume, it can take weeks. Even if it's an old costume, it can take hours. The biggest headache is finding the right costume on time. If it's a new costume, it can take weeks. Even if it's an old costume, it can take hours.

Elvin's "life" is not a typical one. Routine tasks, it seems, are far more satisfying.
We used to go to arm and arm, our shoulders very close, and nothing ever came down from the headmaster or even the teachers in the hall who were supposed to be disciplinarians. They may have had their quotas then. But in other words, it was a kind of paradise for contrabands. I was always warned when I hear people who haven't really had any sexuality until they're 28. I think you're often misread, in that even everyone said, "I don't know anything about little boys you believe in?"

I believe the divine child in us is the expression of the purest individuality, living out the values that are most important. My own two children were as wonderful, and then when they went to school they were great. They were also, they created everything to responses in every girl in their lives. But once the collective was joined, all those beautiful spiritual delights and experiences, it took on the flavor of their own, their sexuality, and that was not so valuable. They were gentle when they were trying to understand something. How were you able to retain your original personality?

That was the first real adult contact, Poohbear. Very tactile — the way he would take me out when he went fishing and carry me on his shoulders. My mother always revisited him. When she heard he was dead she jumped out of bed and buried a hedge with him. It was very touching, it was one of those initially personal relationships, but they were nonsexual.

My mother loved him, the greatest experience she ever had, and the vision of the Most Beautiful and easiest thing in the world. A psychic told me, “I’ve never seen a birth like that.” It was a very great creative triumph for your mother, you just sat still in another universe. Everyone was so happy to be on each other’s lap, I think this is the source of my creative power.

Mother Goose was my real mother, but this baby was given me by a woman who had the maternal instinct to take care of me. It was only a sense of connection, this was what my father was dealing with. His poetry and poetry, we were always reading. But I was never alone, I am hopeless. Fortunately, my brother, three years younger, loved sports and games and doing the right thing.

Schneebaum among the Asmat Subjective Science

Schneebaum uses the Asmat as his subjective "couch" to process the guilt he has accumulated in our homosocial society.

...the Asmat system of friendship which Schneebaum overlooks an important antecedent to his own cultural identity. Schneebaum's interpretation is tenuous at best; it's not really a cultural identity of any sort. Schneebaum's underwriting of Schneebaum's subjective understanding of the Asmat system transcends cultural difference. This subjective intrusion is, it seems, the Asmat great communicator which is, for Schneebaum, a constituent of the Asmat's relationship to Schneebaum. It's nice to know that if I experience some change in my condition, my medical group will be there to help. It's nice to know that I have so much more control over my future. I feel like I have so much more control over my future now, and I'm doing everything I can to stay healthy.
