The battle lines were drawn in Concord Tuesday night as the City Council approved the November ballot a controversial AIDS anti-discrimination bill. It survived a possible one-year delay in a 4-3 decision, with Concord Mayor Cole dissenting - before a packed chamber of gay supporters and anti-discrimination legislators and as the audience overflowed the City Hall in full volume. The fight is far from over, but the debate will now move to the November ballot where it will be decided if Concord will become the first city to pass an AIDS anti-discrimination ordinance.

The ordinance was drafted by the state Department of Health and Human Services and was introduced to the City Council last June. The ordinance is designed to protect individuals with AIDS and HIV from discrimination in housing, employment, education, and public accommodations. It was approved by the State Department of Health and Human Services and is model legislation that can be adopted by any city, but Concord was the first to take the step.

Supporters of the bill argued that it is necessary to protect individuals with AIDS and HIV from discrimination in housing, employment, education, and public accommodations. They said that the ordinance would ensure that individuals with AIDS and HIV have access to the same opportunities as everyone else.

Opponents of the bill argued that it is unnecessary and that it would lead to increased discrimination against individuals with AIDS and HIV. They said that the ordinance would create a special class of people and that it would lead to increased costs for businesses and landlords.

The City Council approved the ordinance by a 4-3 vote. The vote was 4-3, with Mayor Cole dissenting. The ordinance will now be placed on the November ballot for a public vote.

DOMESTIC PARTNERS ON HOLD

took eight years to push the Domestic Partners bill through City Hall, and in less than a month religious groups have prevented the ballot box from taking effect.

Last Wednesday, the day the Domestic Partners bill was scheduled to go into effect, two delegates, the Rev. Charles McInthorpe and Rabbi Lionel Feldstein, submitted petitions containing over 37,000 signatures, twice as many needed to repeal the law.

What that means is that the office of registrar voters finds that the signatures submitted are invalid, the ordinance will be suspended until November, when San Francisco voters will decide its fate.

"We're certain the ordinance will pass just before the petitions," said Lee Warner of Supervisor Germaine Holmes' office, "but there will be a public hearing. What that means is that the process happened long before now.

"They can't sign a petition of their own free will. It's a matter of free will, the act of registration. There has to be a public meeting to hear the comments and the objections."

"There's nothing wrong with a deep abiding friendship between two people, the problem is when that friendship is carried to the point of genital sex."

Archbishop John Quinn openly supports the measure, however, according to Taylor, the archbishop never had any opportunity to sign the petition.

Open Letter to Senator Helms

Notably Jesse Helms, are demanding righteous anger over the work of two organizations: the Southern Poverty Law Center and the Movement for Democracy in Nuclear-Weapon-Free Zones. In fact the budget for RARE has already been cut by 19% over the past three years, and that its allocation is being cut with their right to freedom of expression must be protected. In all of the articles I have read since the SPLC was formed, it has been clearly stated that this organization is working with HIV positive individuals. It is critically important that the feminist movement, like the AIDS movement, not agree with the separation of church and state. The feminist movement must move as a major battle in the Supreme Court with the Webster case, the AIDS movement must be a present possibility for a similar battle, in order to stop religious influence in the determination of our own rights. The community college program needs to be managed more aggressively. The community college ought to take over the functions of both the high school and the junior college. The federal funding for representation of the people is simply to end. The community college ought to be a part of the local government. It needs to be housed in the community college. BOON FOR THE BURBS

By Suzanne R. Fried

more and more people are leaving San Francisco for the outlying suburban areas, and of course this movement includes a large number of gay men and women. But relocating to outlying areas is far more complex when you are Mr. and Mrs. Marred Heterosexual American. For many years people seeking the recording benefit from the suburban area, it also challenges their lifestyle's flexibility in a way that brings in San Francisco.

There are two main reasons why people are moving out of San Francisco. One, according to the San Francisco Chronicle, is the high cost of living. The other reason is the perception of the city as being unsafe and overcrowded.

Many people who moved to the suburbs have found that they enjoy the lower cost of living and the quieter lifestyle. They also find that the suburbs are safer than the city.

However, there are some downsides to living in the suburbs. For example, the social scene is often not as vibrant as in the city. Also, some people find that the commute to work is longer and more stressful.

Despite these challenges, many people are still choosing to live in the suburbs. As one person said, "I love the city, but I can't afford it. The suburbs are cheaper and I can afford to live there."

Conclusion

Moving to the suburbs is not easy, and there are many downsides to living in the suburbs. However, for those who can afford it, the suburbs offer a more affordable and quieter lifestyle. But it is important to weigh the pros and cons before making a decision to move to the suburbs.

Montreal Conference Part II

D DISCRIMINATION, CONDONS AND PROSTITUTION

by Roger Pettyjohn, RN

Montreal, Canada from June 4-9, 1989. Because the texts of the poster presentations were not available in the abstract volume published by the conference, this essay will summarize some of the oral presentations discussed below that refer to the intersectoral-use definition system used in the abstract volume. Copies of this volume can be obtained from delegates who attended the conference.

Several of the poster presentations included a specialty section written for us by delegates who attended the conference and through reference libraries at AIDS organizations. The focus of this second part will be on social and policy issues.

Discrimination against people with AIDS and HIV infection was reviewed in one poster presentation, William Cmeras of the Harvard School of Public Health and a global survey of AIDS legislations (WHO 7) to which he detailed the little protection currently available for the human rights of persons affected. Eighteen countries in the world have laws that permit quarantine of people with AIDS and 21 countries have criminal laws against the transmission of HIV as a means of enforcing mandatory HIV testing. He characterized most legislation as emotional rather than rational.

James Masters, assistant U.S. Secretary of Health pointed out in his speech before a plenary session that “Discrimination in jobs and housing is a peculiar disease in society, and the public is aware of it as a work of social work care, as well as the ability of the health officials to prevent the spread of the disease.” He stopped, however, from remembering that discrimination against individuals suffering from “subtle and widespread diseases is characteristic of all mankind.”

s the main character of the film. He brought us back to the forefront of gay cinema and gave the movies a new lease of life. Without a major box office hit, the mainstream cinema and "gay cinema" were on the verge of extinction. "The timing was coincidental, but not accidental," said the veteran director, "the timing was so bad it didn't matter where its place was in the industry."
A court-appointed arbitrator last week notified 205 gay and lesbian employees that they had successfully asserted their claims that Pacific Bell had discriminated against them in employment. The suit, filed in 1973 by the National Gay Law Students Association and four individual plaintiffs against Pacific Telephone. The law students claimed that they had applied or would apply for employment with Pacific Bell and that they had been denied employment as a result of their sexual orientation.

After the Supreme Court of California decided in 1973 that Pacific Bell could not use sexual orientation as a criterion for employment, the Gay Law Students Association sued Pacific Bell in 1975. Shortly before the scheduled trial date, in 1980, a settlement was reached in which Pacific Bell agreed to pay $3.2 million to the class of employees affected. The settlement was approved by the court.
